A novel obsession

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

SOUTH END — In 1973, a leftist coup overthrew the last Afghani monarchy. In 1979, Russian tanks rumbled across the border in the beginning of what many now call the Soviet "Vietnam."

For many in America though, Afghanistan is just a far away place — a 30-second blurb on the evening news about a land more famous for her shawls than for her people.

For Newton native Mimi Hirsh, however, Afghanistan is a 10-year obsession that culminated in "Kabul", a novel about an ancient society forced into the "reality" of the 20th Century.

While she was growing up on Homer Street, her mother took in nursing students from countries like Egypt, China, Thailand and Brazil, and Hirsh gained first-hand knowledge about what was going on beyond the headlines and newscasts.

"These students were not just 19-year-old girls," she says. "Many of them were a great deal older and came to this country to earn an advanced degree. I got to know them and it means something to you if you've known an Egyptian woman and have picked up on some of her experiences and conflicts."

> 'Violence on television today is like Crackerjacks. We are seeing the banality of evil every night.'

Relating to news stories of far-away lands has often been difficult for many in Fortress America, surrounded on two sides by thousands of miles of ocean. For Mimi Hirsh, there always seemed to be real people behind the talking heads.

"We had one woman named Graziella stay with us," she says. "She was from Brazil. After she left to go back home, if there was trouble right around where she lives and she hadn't written in a while, you started caring a lot more about what was going on in the world."

Years later, during her third term as director of public affairs for the Welfare Depart-

After 8 years of debate

Permit parking plan OK'd

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Garden City residents, despite a last-ditch effort by Alderman Matthew Jefferson, will be able to petition the Board of Aldermen for resident permit parking.

The board Monday night voted 12-6 to deny Jefferson's motion to reconsider a 15-6 vote in favor of the plan taken two weeks ago. After more than eight years of debate, Newton residents can now apply for restricted parking on a street-by-street basis.

Proponents of permit parking have said that students, commuters, shoppers and employees who visit the city use up available on-street parking. Opponents said the ordinance would deny Newton residents the right to park on some city streets even though the help maintain those streets through property taxes.

> Ald. Matthew Jefferson

"This might be my last gasp," Jefferson said prophetically. "I'm doing my best to pull the fat out of the fire."

Jefferson unsuccessfully tried to persaude aldermen that by passing the legislation. non-residents would be allowed to park on some streets while residents would not. He said that issuing visitor and temporary parking permits would enable non-resident guests to park on a restricted street without receiving the $10 ticket police would issue.

Alderman Verne Vance, a permit parking proponent, rebuffed Jefferson's arguments.

"Visitor permits are issued to Newton residents who wish to have their guests park on their street," Vance said. "The temporary permits would be issued to institutions like churches and public service organizations for functions that would benefit the city but require on-street parking in restricted areas. In both cases, the permits would be temporary and not affixed to the windshield of an auto like the resident permits would be."

Under the plan, at least one resident from 50 percent of the households on a street would be able to ask the board to restrict

Aquino coup toasted

By Ed Cafasso, Staff Writer

CHESTNUT HILL — Four weeks ago, area Filipinos gathered in St. Ignatius Church to pray that violence and bloodshed would not mar their country's long battle for justice.

Last week, more than 250 returned to the church on the edge of the Boston College campus to thank God for answering their prayer in a way few thought possible and to ask for divine guidance as their countrymen rebuild democracy in the Philippines.

During his sermon, Fr. Edmundo Martinez, vice president of Jesuit University in the Philippines, told those gathered to put aside any feelings of vengeance toward exiled former president Ferdinand E. Marcos.

"Judgment is mine, says the Lord ... Let us now look to the present, not to the evil of the past, except as a healthy reminder for the future," he said.

Martinez said Filipinos should consider Marcos' overthrow "a badge of shining and outstanding honor," describing the peaceful coup as "merely a dramatic climax" of a courageous effort on the part of hundreds of individuals.

"We thank God he has given us such heroes and heroines as countrymen," he said. "Let us live up to the obligation that his goodness has imposed on us."

The same national unity that helped catapult new President Cory Aquino to power should now be used to "build a just and enviable nation," he added.

Near the end of the mass, Aquino's niece, Zsa Zsa Lichauco, read a message she received during a phone conversation with relatives in the tiny island country.

They asked Lichauco to thank the people of Boston, Cardinal Bernard Law and the entire Boston Archdiocese for the support and "deep friendship" they had shown during the recent crisis.

They also asked her to remember her uncle, Benigno S. Aquino, who lived in exile in Newton for three years, hoping to some day lead his country through a nonviolent revolution, but died at the hands of an assassin's bullet before his dream was fulfilled.

Mediator joins police talks

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — City officials and representatives of the Newton Police Association will sit down later this week with mediator Tim Bornstein in an effort to end the 20-month old labor dispute.

"Reason should prevail," Mayor Theodore Mann said last week. "Bornstein is a recognized authority in negotiations and both the city and police have agreed to go to him."

Negotiations between the parties broke off in December when the NPA rank and file rejected a proposed wage offer calling for raises of 5, 5.5, 6 and 5 percent over four years. Since then, union members have held a number of demonstrations to inform the public about what they said is unfair bargaining on the city's behalf. The officers, according to NPA President Lynda Glenn, say they are frustrated at the city's unwillingness to bargain.

The officers, pointing to the Dec. ratification by the teachers of a contract offering raises of 7, 7 and 6 percent, say they want similar raises. Mann, however, says the city cannont afford to offer more than what is on the table. He says because the extra money for the NEWTON — Firefighters and the city will attempt once again to settle their contract dispute in a March 12 bargaining session. This time they will be joined by a mediator, attorney Theodore O'Brien.

O'Brien, a member of the state's Joint Labor Management Commission (JLMC), will attempt to resolve contractural difference which have lingered for 20 months and that led to three informational pickets in the last two weeks.

Firefighters attempted to bring their message to the public, saying they felt the salary offers have not been large enough and both have charged the city with not bargaining in good faith.

Last week, Richard Kelliher, the city's chief administrative officer, disputed those charges with figures showing what firefighters would make if they accepted the same four-year, 23.4 percent raise offered to police.

The city would have to spend about $40,000 annually in salary and benefits for a firefighter with more than two years experience, Kelliher said.

The battle against age discrimination

By Lauren McFalls, Assistant News Editor

OAK HILL — The notion that old people should be put out to pasture with their golf clubs, shuffle board courts and bingo parlors is one image some 35 older men and women who attended a recent panel discussion on "Age Discrimination at Work" would like to see changed.

Although, as one maxim states, "Life begins at 40," age discrimination within various companies also begins at that age, said discussion participants.

A recent panel discussion was the "first full scale effort to air a closet problem that needs much more airing," said Boston Globe columnist Juliet Brudney, who moderated the discussion at the Gosman Jewish Community Campus.

Co-sponsored by the Jewish Vocational Service and Operation ABLE (Ability Based On Long Experience) of Greater Boston, the panel included representatives from different sides of the age discrimination issue, including the older job searcher, the employer, and the governmental agency charged with helping those who feel they have experienced discrimination.

Computers lend an ear for special needs pupils

By Maureen Azzato

NEWTON — For Mary Pasackarnis, a junior attending Newton North High School, the mysteries of the English language always seemed locked behind a soundproofed door.

But for Pasackarnis, the key to that door has proved to be an innovative program utilizing computers to assist deaf, hearing impaired and other special needs students.

"The information comes faster to me, and I don't have to ask the teacher to help me or to tell me whether my answers are right or wrong," Pasackarnis, who is completely deaf, explained in sign language. "It's all very clear to me on the screen. I feel like it's my own screen, and it's just me and the computer interacting."

The computer-assisted writing program, dubbed "Tigerwriter" after the Newton North mascot, was designed by three Newton North teachers for special needs students who have difficulty with reading and writing skills. It is geared toward students who are learning disabled, hearing impaired and emotionally disturbed, as well as large numbers of students whose difficulties with literacy remain undiagnosed.

BC bowing to social change

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

CHESTNUT HILL — Students at Haley House say Boston College's decision to discontinue their home, orginally established as a center for social justice, is a sign of the times - one that has left them angry and sad.

BC administration last week told the 10 Haley House residents to remove their belongings by May 21, when seniors also must vacate dormitories.

A housing shortage led to the decision to relocate another campus facility at the Hammond Street communal center, according to BC.

But while they agree the shortage exists, Haley House students say there may be more to the decision. Their participation in protests of the university's South African investments and one resident's struggle for recognition of a gay-lesbian student group may also have played a part, they said.

"If it were simply a question of space constraints, we could have been offered a couple of suites together in a dorm," said John Hoffmeyer, the house's only graduate student.

Some felt the gay-lesbian issue had the most impact on BC's decision. The Lesbian Gay Community at Boston College (LGCBC) was denied official official club recognition by the university shortly before Christmas break.

The group continues to meet at Haley House. "In some ways, getting rid of of the place they meet, it'll be hard for them to function," said junior Susan Reddy.

The demise of the social justice communal center mirrors changing attitudes at colleges across the nation, they said. Racial equality, peace, poverty and women's rights were major campus issues 15 years ago, but the driving force at universities today is money, they said.

"People think, 'I won't get a job in social justice. There's no money in it,'" said Lilibeth Denham.

"The activism isn't with the student population now," said senior Maria Qualtere.

BC Sociology Professor Michael Malec said to a "certain extent" there is less social activism now than in the late 1960s and early 1970s.

Watergate, the Vietnam War and racial unrest all stirred the conscience of America, he said. "Today we live in a much more comfortable, much less concerned, much less involved world," said Malec.

rHe sees the closing of Haley House both as a symbolic and a tangible loss to BC.

The home serves as both a "measure" of the university's commitment to social justice and is a concrete "catalyst" for students to develop their interests, he said.

Haley House has a 10-year tradition of social justice and communal living.

The home was named after BC graduate Leo P. Haley who died in 1966 of a heart attack. Haley, 24, was executive director of the Catholic Interracial Council and a civil rights advocate.

The night before he died three men robbed him at knifepoint, then forced him into the back seat while they drove his car around Boston.

Haley, who had a weak heart, died the next day on the way to Mass.

BC spokesman Benjamin Birnbaum said the decision to close the home does not mean the university is turning its back on the tradition Haley and BC's Jesuit background symbolize.

"The university is very committed to social justice," Birnbaum said. "It has been an integral part of the university since its inception. It's been a Jesuit tradition."

The University Chaplaincy has established "permanent ties" between Haley House and its Faith, Peace and Justice Program, Birnbaum said.

That program offers courses in theology, philosophy and personal values and its students perform field work at institutions such as Rosie's Place, which gives shelter to homeless women in Boston's South End, Birnbaum said.

BC also will form a committee of Faith, Peace and Justice faculty and Haley House residents to recommend means of restoring community living for social justice students, he said.

Birnbaum outlined the housing crunch now facing BC.

The university has 5,425 students living in dormitories out of an undergraduate population of 8,000, he said. Currently, there are 900 students on the dormitory waiting list.

Provided it receives the necessary Newton permits, the university will raze two office buildings on Commonwealth Avenue to create dormitories for 380 students.

Alumni Hall, one of the Commonwealth Avenue buildings, will be moved to Putnam House on the university's Newton Campus. BC plans to relocate Putnam House — whose facilities include meeting areas for functions and seminars — at Haley House, said Birnbaum.

"I would agree with the university that a more intensive use of this property is needed," said Jerry Koch-Gonzalez, Haley House Coordinator and a BC employee.

But programs such as Faith, Peace and Justice cannot adequately replace Haley House, he said. "There is a difference between understanding issues and advocating issues," he said.

Students at Haley House are an independent voice that challenges the university on social issues, Koch-Gonzalez said. He questions whether the same will occur under Faith, Peace and Justice.

"It's really hard for an institution to create a component that is self critical," he said.

He said he did not know if the South Africa and gay-lesbian issues had any part in BC's decision.

But the gay-lesbian issue has stirred much controversy and has led to the stereotyping of Haley House as primarily a gay rights center.

"This is not a gay and lesbian house. There are some gays and lesbians who live here," Koch-Gonzalez said. "The gay-lesbian issue is only one of a number of issues we look at."

A quick look at a bulletin board and walls of the Haley House kitchen proves his point. Pamphlets, flyers and newsarticles show concerns about battered women, the U.S. policy in Nicaragua, pesticides, and scores of other issues.

Residents insist there is no pressure to share the same viewpoint on issues. There are strong disagreements on abortion, for example, sophomore Jeff Korgen said.

Decisions on everything from social justice activities to dishwashing duties are reached at weekly meetings by consensus, they said. Social justice begins with a feeling of community, they said.

Haley House is "a microcosm of how people should be connected," Qualtere said. "I think it's really sad there's not going to be a place for this to happen."

"I don't believe the university is doing this," said Reddy. "It makes me very sad not just for us who are living here now, but for the students who won't get this chance."

Request for dismissal of Ossinger suit nixed

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

EAST CAMBRIDGE — Middlesex Superior Court Judge J. Harold Flannery has rejected a motion to dismiss the breach of contract lawsuit filed against Mayor Theodore D. Mann by his former secretary, Diane F. Ossinger.

Flannery struck down Attorney Edward J. Barshak's request for dismissal after finding a difference between the charges contained in Ossinger's latest civil suit and one that he dismissed last August.

But, in his written decision, Flannery specifically avoided commenting on the validity of Ossinger's latest complaint, apparently leaving open the possibility that Barshak could end the six-year-old court battle by requesting a summary judgment.

He said Ossinger "may be unable to establish either of her breach of contract theories, but the present motion to strike her amended complaint is the functional equivalent of a motion to dismiss for failure to state a claim upon which relief may be granted."

Complaints involving such motions are "construed liberally," added Flannery.

However, in a footnote to his ruling, the judge seemed to invite Barshak to ask for a summary judgment against Ossinger. A summary judgment motion would allow Flannery to rule on the case as it currently stands and without a full-blown trial.

"I express no view about whether (Mann) may yet be able to show that there is no genuine issues of material fact and that he is entitled to judgment as a matter of law on the plaintiff's present claims," Flannery noted.

In an interview, Barshak said the ruling could be considered as a "negative" development, but he preferred to describe it as "a non-event" that simply returns the case to square one.

"I haven't even had a chance to talk to my client (Mann), so I don't want to comment on what we'll do next," he added.

Ossinger's attorney, Regina L. Quinlan, reacted to the ruling by saying, "I suppose it's a small victory."

Although she believes Ossinger "still has a viable claim," Quinlan would not comment further on the case.

Mann fired Ossinger, his executive secretary for eight years, on March 7, 1980, the same day Newton police charged her with 44 counts of larceny for allegedly stealing all or part of Mann's paychecks.

Almost eight months later, Ossinger was found innocent of the charges. Soon after, she sued Mann for allegedly firing her without the due process granted under civil service law and the city charter.

Last year, when Barshak asked for a summary judgment, Flannery ruled that Ossinger was not a civil service employee, but he allowed Quinlan to file an amended complaint based on a new theory of law.

The latest complaint accuses Mann of violating Ossinger's employment contract and "willfully and maliciously" violating "the implied covenant of good faith and fair dealing" contained in that contract.

Barshak based his dismissal motion on the grounds that the new complaint did not allege a new cause of action or a new theory of law, but merely expanded on theories already rejected by Flannery.

Take the law to heart.

Shannon campaign machine has local origins

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTONVILLE — Martina Jackson, chairperson of the Ward 2 Democratic Committee, is reviving James Shannon's political apparatus in preparation for the former congressman's campaign for attorney general.

Jackson, who helped coordinate Shannon's failed bid for the U.S. Senate in 1984, said she has been acting as "sort of a maintenance man" by keeping the Lawrence native's field organization together during the political off-season.

She believes Shannon is "the clear front-runner" to succeed Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti by virtue of poll results released last week by Secretary of State Michael J. Connolly.

More than 20 percent of the 496 registered Democrats polled by Advanced Marketing Technologies, of Concord, said they would pull the lever for Shannon if the election were held today, according to Connolly.

Connolly cited the poll results, along with family considerations, as the main reasons for his decision not to run for attorney general.

Middlesex County District Attorney Scott Harshbarger, who has strong support in this area, registered 13.7 percent in the "name recognition" survey and Connolly polled 12.4 percent, but more than one-third of those surveyed were undecided.

Ironically, Harshbarger endorsed Shannon during the hotly-contested 1984 primary race against John Kerry, the eventual winner. Shannon won big in Newton in the primary, while losing statewide.

Jackson said she expects Shannon to formally his candidacy "fairly soon" and left little doubt about her involvement in the campaign.

"I'd certainly like to work in field," she said, adding that a "surprising number of people" have volunteered to help the 33-year-old senior partner in the Hale & Dorr law firm.

Since October, Jackson has been working re-activate Shannon's supporters "both from the grassroots up and the top down."

The task includes recruiting an array of precinct captains, ward coordinators, city coordinators and regional coordinators, as well as arranging mass mailings, fundraisers and poll coverage.

She said Shannon's experience in issues involving consumer protection, energy regulations, environmental law and civil rights gives him "the breadth of experience" needed to be a credible candidate to suceed Bellotti.

To get on the ballot, Shannon will need to capture at least 15 percent of the approximately 3,200 delegates expected to attend the Democratic State Convention in June.

Jackson, who also coordinated the 1984 Mondale-Ferraro presidential campaign in Newton, said the Garden City's delegates appear "evenly split" between Harshbarger and Shannon at the present.

Death at dry cleaners being investigated

NONANTUM — Investigators are waiting for the results of state crime lab tests in an effort to determine what caused a man to die Wednesday in a Nonantum dry cleaners, although initial reports from police had the death being caused by asphyxiation, presumably from toxic fumes inside the drycleaning machine in which he was found.

A coworker found the body of Fred DeCosta, 27, of Stoughton in the machine at Central Cleaners on Watertown Street about 2 p.m. Thursday.

A spokesman from the Middlesex County District Attorney's office, Tom Samoluk, said investigators are operating on the theory that DeCosta showed up for work Wednesday morning at the his usual time, shortly before 7 a.m. Samoluk said there were no signs that a struggle occurred in the building. He would not say whether or not the death appeared to be accidental.

Several Central Cleaners employees, who came to work Wednesday morning after DeCosta usually arrived, said they did not see him all day. They also said the machine in which the body was found was not used all day Wednesday or Thursday because it was DeCosta's job to operate it.

After performing an autopsy, Medical Examiner Dr. Nathaniel Brackett said there were no signs of foul play on the body. He said he could not pinpoint the time of death, but that DeCosta probably died Wednesday morning.

DeCosta had worked at Central Cleaners for about a year. Other employees said he was "handsome" and "happy-go-lucky," and that he did not seem like someone who would commit suicide. He and his wife had a 15-month old child and were expecting another in July.

Suit filed against Green housing project

CAMBRIDGE — In a lawsuit filed in Middlesex Superior Court, 19 Brighton and Newton residents are challenging a special permit granted by the Newton Board of Aldermen for construction of condominiums and townhouses on the former St. Sebastian's School property.

The complaint, naming the aldermen and the Green Company Inc., of Newton as defendants, asks that a judge annul a special permit granted last Feb. 6 for the project, located off of Hood Street, Huntington Road and Kenrick Street. The proposed development, straddling the Newton/Boston line, includes 104 units of housing for the elderly on the Newton side with more units located in Boston.

The special permit granted excepts the proposed multi-family project from present zoning requirements as the site is a single-family residence E district.

The suit claims the density of the proposed project is too high, making it inconsistent with the intent of the city's zoning ordinances.

According to the suit, the Green Company plans to construct 251 units in total. The aldermen's decision "ignores the inordinate density" of the proposed project and its potential impact on surrounding neighborhoods, the complaint claims.

The suit was filed by attorneys Sheldon M. Dreucker and Marilyn D. Stempler, on behalf of the residents who either abut or live close to the development.

According to court documents, the regular condominium units will have an age restriction starting at 55 years while there will be no age restriction on the townhouses, of which nine are planned on the Newton side.

The residents claim that the aldermen approved the special permit despite a negative recommendation from the Land Use Committee, which voted 3-4 against the proposed development, stating that more members might approve it if the density was lowered.

According to a copy of the aldermen's decision, state Rep. David Cohen has filed legislation that would allow the undersized parcel to be limited to sales to persons 55 years or older. At present, there is no legislation that would allow a parcel of only 16.3 acres to be so limited, the decision states.

Known fugitive charged in Newton rape

CAMBRIDGE — A Middlesex County grand jury last week indicted one of the state's most wanted fugitives on charges related to an armed robbery in Newton, a Newton/Waltham incident involving the rape, kidnapping, assault and battery and armed robbery of a Waltham woman, a Weston break and entry into a building, an assault on a Waltham student who was walking to school and an unarmed robbery in Bedford.

Charged by the grand jury was James M. LeBlanc, 24, arrested at a Quincy bar last Jan. 23. LeBlanc is being held at the Massachusetts Correctional Institution at Concord on a parole violation.

Assistant Middlesex District Attorney Peter Bella said that LeBlanc, last Jan. 14, kidnapped a woman after she got into her car at the Woodland MBTA station in Newton. Bella said LeBlanc forced his way into the car while threatening her with a screwdriver and made her go to an industrial park in Waltham where he allegedly raped her in the car in a parking lot.

LeBlanc later drove her to the Cleveland Circle area where he told her to keep her head down for at least 10 minutes and he then fled, according to Bella. He said she later identified him as her assailant by selecting his picture from a police photographic array.

Bella said LeBlanc was on parole from a breaking and entering conviction at the time of the offensive.

On Sept. 28, 1985, in Newton, a young woman was waiting for a ride at the Chestnut Hill MBTA station when LeBlanc allegedly approached her with a knife and grabbed her handbag. Bella said the station was dark because there had been a power outage. LeBlanc was charged with armed robbery in that incident.

On Jan. 22, 1986, according to Bella, LeBlanc allegedly came out of some woods near the long driveway leading to the Waltham High School and, holding a screwdriver, asked a young girl for some money. She said she had none, said Bella, who added that LeBlanc fled when some people approached.

He was indicted in connection with that incident on a charge of armed assault with intent to rob. The girl also identified LeBlanc from police photographs, said Bella.

$3 million suit filed against Marriott

CAMBRIDGE — A Watertown woman who nearly died, according to her lawyer, after sipping a glass of "ammonia or other chemicals" at a bar in the Newton Marriott Hotel is suing for $3 million.

The suit, filed in Middlesex County Superior Court by Laurie M. Conrad, 26, charges the Marriott Hotel Corp. with negligence. It also charges that "willful, wanton, and reckless" conduct on the part of hotel employees may have been involved in the Feb. 9, 1986 incident.

The suit alleges that Conrad was served a glass of soda water containing ammonia or other caustic chemicals in one of the hotel's cocktail lounges. Conrad's attorney, Thomas E. Connolly, based in Boston, said Monday the woman, who works at a high-tech company and who is a graduate of Wesleyan College in Connecticut, suffered severe injuries and was hospitalized for six days.

Connolly said a male friend who was with Conrad had the "presence of mind" to bring her immediately to the kitchen where he forced milk into her stomach until she vomited.

Connolly said the woman was given "great treatment" by Newton/Wellesley Hospital medical staff. "If they didn't get that stuff out of her internal organs as fast as they did, she would have died," said Connolly. Connolly said the woman is still under the care of a physician.

A spokesman for the Marriott Hotel said the management would have no comment on the suit.

Connolly said the hotel believes the bottle of ammonia, used at the hotel for cleaning purposes, inadvertently was placed "where the drinks were." Connolly said she drank only a mouthful before having a severe reaction. Newton police investigated, according to Connolly.

Conrad also is claiming that the hotel breached its warranty to her as a customer because the drink it served was not fit to be consumed.

The corporation has 20 days to answer the complaint, once officially notified of its filing.

Local GOP elects convention delegates

NEWTON — About 40 people gathered at the American Legion Post 440 last weekend to elect 10 delegates to the April 12 Republican Party state convention.

Jody Dow, Republican committee woman for second Middlesex-/Norfolk senatorial district, said 13 residents from Newton and Brookline vied for the 10 seats.

The caucus was one of 40 held statewide at which about 480 delegates were chosen for the convention. This marked the first time the Massachusetts Republican Party held caucuses to select delegates.

The 480 delegates will join around 2,000 chosen by the usual method, town and ward committee meetings.

The April 12 convention will be held at the Worcester Centrum. Candidates for the statewide Republican primary will be chosen then.

The convention will be managed by former Gov. John Volpe. The featured speaker will be Vice President George Bush. The night before, a reception at the Worcester Sheraton will honor former United Nations Ambassador Jeanne Kilpatrick.

For a candidate's name to appear on the ballot, he must receive 10 percent of the total delegate vote.

By allowing any Republican to attend the caucus and run for a delegate spot, the party is hoping broaden its base of support and "get people interested in party work," Dow said.

The caucuses were designed to capitalize on the large numbers of people who worked for President Ronald Reagan's reelection, she said.

"A lot of people were active for the Reagan-Bush campaign," she said. "This is one way to keep them going."

Of the turnout at the American Legion, Dow said, "I think it was a good attendance, considering you're in a liberal, Democratic district."

From Newton, the following delegates were elected: John McDermott, Nelson Silk, David Owens, Bernard Cosman, Martha Bradley, Mary G. Lee.

Pines names Rutan campaign manager

NEWTON — Lois Pines has named Jane Rutan, a former legislative aide to State Rep. David B. Cohen, as the manager of her campaign to succeed State Senator Jack Backman (D-Newton/Brookline).

Rutan, of 71 Waban Hill Road, is a mother of two, a member of the Democratic City Committee and has been elected to several state Democratic conventions.

Pines rounded out her top campaign staff by announcing the appointment of Fay G. Cohen, of 15 Cottonswood Road, as her Newton coordinator and Gail Hoffman, of Brookline, as the coordinator in that town.

"I'm very excited about the whole campaign and I'm very pleased to be a part of it," Rutan said. "We're getting it all together and we're going to see it through to victory."

Surgical masks, gloves and plastic tubes for mouth-to-mouth resuscitation are recent additions to police gear.

Cops fight AIDS threat

By David Weber, Staff Writer

NEWTON — As fear about AIDS spreads to all segments of the population, some area police departments are taking precautions against the disease by using specially designed equipment for administering emergency medical service.

The Newton Police Department recently issued surgical masks, surgical gloves and plastic airways, called S-tubes, to be used for mouth-to-mouth resuscitation.

Lt. James O'Donnell said the move was made in response to "the growing concern over the AIDS problem in our society. Police officers many times are the first responders at the scene of an accident. This gives them a means of protecting themselves."

The Watertown Police now use nylon gloves and flexible nylon handcuffs if they are dealing with a prisoner known to have AIDS. Police Spokesman Officer John York said S-tubes have been in the patrol cruisers since before the disease began receiving so much attention.

Weston Police have been using a portable device to administer cardiopulmonary resuscitation instead of using the mouth-to-mouth method. The device consists of a mask, which fits over the patient's nose and face, and a bag that is squeezed to pump air into the patient's mouth.

A department spokesman said the devices were being used for a while, then were taken out of the cruisers. They were brought back several months ago in response to fears about AIDS.

The Waltham Police Department has not issued any special anti-AIDS equipment to its officers, according to Capt. John McDonald. He said the department would consider purchasing the equipment if the city came up with the money to pay for it.

Oil price could affect public safety

News of an "oil glut" and a radical drop in prices brings with it some interesting questions.

For instance, why does it take so long for the retail price of fuel to drop along with the wholesale price?

We are told that suppliers have to lay away something in the bank, knowing that, sooner or later, prices will go up again. The question then is: How much lag time is there between wholesale and retail prices when they are on their way up?

Not very much, we would have to guess.

Your neighborhood gas station owner is not really the one to ask about all this. His margins are dangerously slim. The oil companies make sure of that. It would be more appropriate to ask the large oil dealers why their prices stayed as high as they did as long as they did while huge tankers wallowed in Boston harbor, waiting and waiting to unload their cargo at bargain basement prices.

Another question: What was the lag time between Boston Edison's realizing that fuel price drops were resulting in profits unacceptable to the state Department of Public Utilities and its announcing to customers that power bills would indeed be going down?

Next question: Where was the DPU when it looked, long ago, like fuel oil prices would be tumbling?

Another question: Where will the large amounts of city money, allocated to buy fuel oil before prices dropped so drastically and before we knew we would have such a mild winter, end up after they have been handed back to the city by various departments?

Final question: Is it possible the fuel oil dividends granted the city by unforseen circumstances could possibly be used to bring disgruntled police and firefighters back into the fold?

It would behoove the city's administration to make the most of fortuitous circumstances.

Duke's path to D.C. is a well—marked one

Jimmy Carter did it. So did Ronald Reagan. Why not a quantum leap from the governorship to the presidency for Michael Dukakis? Why not, indeed; nearly every assessment of the 1988 Democratic scramble for position places him with the top four or five possibles.

A second question: Can anyone other than someone from the Kennedy royal family achieve such stature in his homeland? Ted's shelving of ambitions, at least for the present, makes this answer relatively easy. Emergence of a new generation Kennedy with enough clout to carry the torch has to be at least a decade away, even more.

Thus, here and now, Governor Mike is the acknowledged superstar in stage center. His evident lock on the Statehouse job and chance for a big re-election win in November will provide impetus for national projection. Most governors get caught up by Potomac fever. Our head of state has reason to be afflicted. Every list of Democrats on the guess parade contains his name. Business Week was the latest to put him in contention.

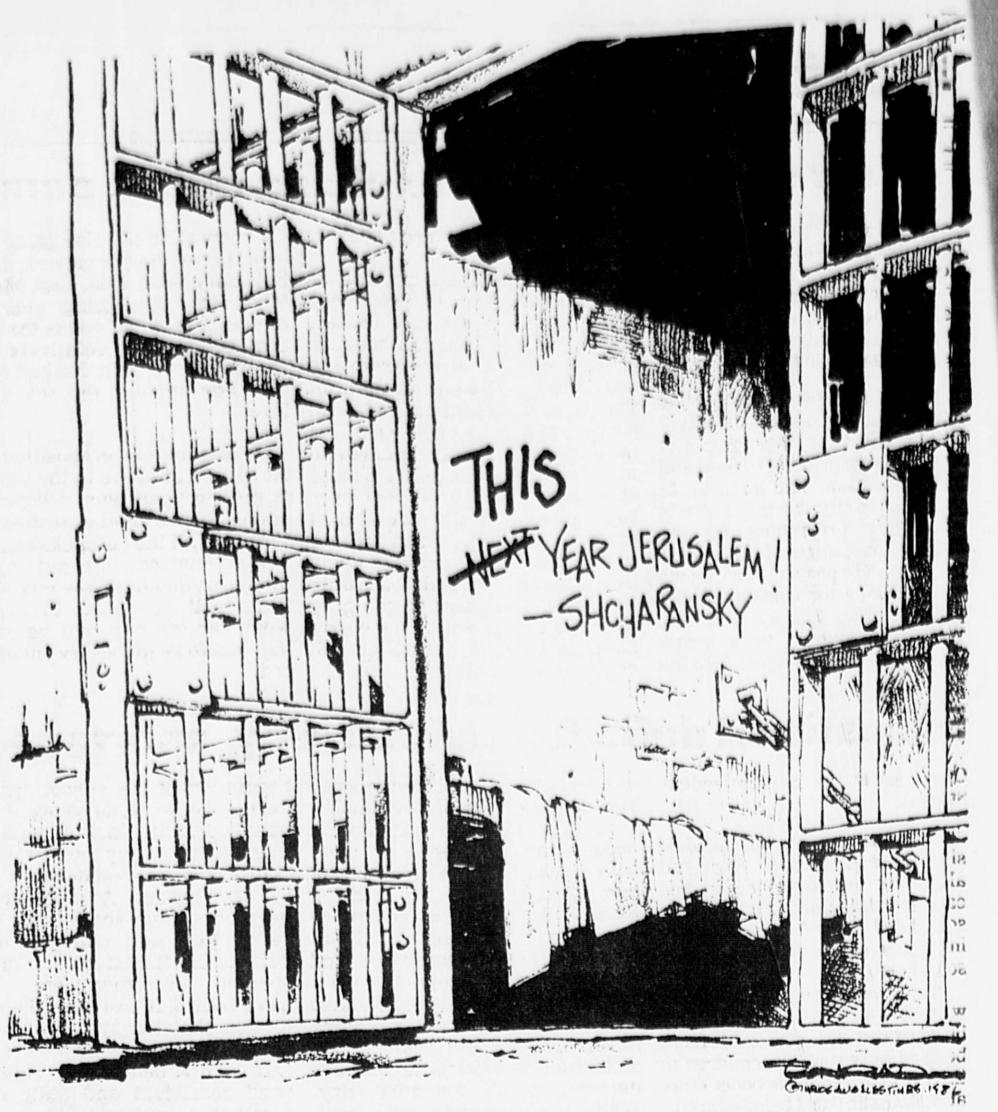

The Massachusetts party leader has certainly piled up a lot of credits. While it can be claimed he is riding the crest of an economic wave not of his making, he unquestionably has subordinated liberal views as a moderate more in tune with the conservative trend. He carries on a running battle with the Reagan administration while at the same time borrowing much that has been pushed by Republicans. He has drawn praise from the president on job incentives drawing people from welfare roles, in fact.

But Dukakis is fighting Mr. Reagan strenuously on this same subject as a strong voice in the National Governors Association. He is resisting any withdrawal of federal funding he believes to be part of the 1987 budget proposals. Reagan people say there will be no elimination, only a transfer. No matter; the issue was that it commanded attention.

Our governor is on the shuttle to Washington more frequently than ever. His journeys throughout the nation to take advantage of any invitation extended are strongly reminiscent of the previous rematch campaign against Ed King when he whistlestopped the state so much. That, plus network TV exposure like the Today Show, is the way to go. Like Jimmy Carter, he is making the swing early.

It's a long, long road for the Bay Stater. In establishing himself as a serious contender, he also has to become a recognizable personality from coast to coast. More than Jimmy, however, he has a charismatic problem. The Duke is low key, more reflective than ebullient, a thinker who isn't much of a smiler. Making him into a hail fellow, well met, is going to be a pretty formidable task.

Don't count him out. The Dukakis of today is a pragmatic veteran with high adjustment capability. Much will depend on whether he can dramatize a truly vital new departure in national government. By 1988, the big score may be there. At the very least, lacking an actual presidential shot, his availability in the vice presidency field could develop.

What might have been little more than a ho-hum 1986 election campaign in Massachusetts now seems likely to be anything but that.

The sudden "I do not choose to run for reelection" declaration by Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti has all but guaranteed a free-for-all for that $65,000-a-year post.

Although the cast of contenders seeking to become the state's top law officer is considerably smaller than that running for the congressional seat being vacated by US House Speaker Thomas P. O'Neill Jr., it seems sure to command attention throughout Massachusetts.

Why Mr. Bellotti waited so long to announce his noncandidacy may never be known. But it certainly left would-be successors with little time to decide whether to run, to organize their forces, and to raise campaign funds. Aspirants have until May 6 to collect and file for certification at least 10,000 voter signatures.

That's only half the challenge, however. To compete for the nomination in the September primary, a Democratic candidate needs the support of at least 15 percent of the delegates to the party's preprimary convention in May. A Republican, on the other hand, must win 10 percent of the delegate vote at that party's April gathering to pursue the GOP nomination.

Because of the late start, collecting the required backing could pose a problem, especially for Democratic hopefuls who may not be well known statewide. Had the Bellotti move come earlier, it might have been considerably easier for fellow Democrats interested in his post, since they could have competed for delegate slates at local Democratic caucuses Feb. 8.

While Bellotti has made it clear that he intends to remain neutral, as a loyal Democrat he will presumably throw his weight behind his party's nominee. Were he to take sides before the primary, however, he would almost surely offend some of those with whom he has worked in the past, possibly including one or two former aides.

Among potential Democratic candidates are District Attorney Scott Harshbarger of Middlesex County, State Consumer Affairs Secretary Paula Gold, and former US Rep. James M. Shannon. Both Secretary Gold and District Attorney Harshbarger are former Bellotti aides and were on his original team when he took office in January 1975.

Perhaps best known statewide, however, is Mr. Shannon who narrowly missed defeating then-Lt. Gov. John F. Kerry for the Democratic nomination for US senator in 1984.

Despite state voter registration totals heavily weighted toward the Democrats, Republican attorney-general prospects appear their brightest in the past two decades.

A lot could hinge on whether the GOP is able to avoid a potentially divisive battle for the nomination. Edward F. Harrington, a bitter Bellotti critic who quit the Democratic Party last year presumably to get a crack at toppling the attorney general, appears to be very much a candidate for the GOP nomination.

But to reach the November ballot he may have no free ride. Both US Attorney William F. Weld and Wayne Budd, chairman of the state Civil Service Commission, have been weighing a try for the GOP nomination.

Both Mr. Harrington and Mr. Weld have statewide campaign experience. But it is uncertain how much of an asset that might be, since neither won. Weld, then a virtual unknown even in Republican ranks, was his party's nominee against Attorney General Bellotti in 1978. Four years earlier, Harrington was among a half-dozen contenders for the Democratic nomination for attorney general. Bellotti topped the field and went on narrowly to down Republican challenger Josiah A. Spaulding for the then-open seat.

Weld as US attorney has gained considerable exposure through the prosecution of a broad range of widely publicized cases, including some involving political corruption.

Harrington, too, over the years has gained visibility, first as head of the US Justice Department's organized-crime strike force in New England, later as US attorney, and most recently as a Bellotti foe and a Democratic dropout.

Had Bellotti decided to go for a fourth term, he almost surely would have faced no Democratic challenger, and, except for Harrington, it is questionable whether any Republican would have tried to topple him, an effort generally viewed as a lost cause.

Regardless of who runs, the thrust of the campaign will be issue-oriented rather than being aimed at any shortcomings of the incumbent. The 12 Bellotti years were marked by his pursuits in behalf of the consumer, environmental protection and human rights.

The Quincy Democrat, who gave up a lucrative private law practice to devote his full time to his elected responsibilities as attorney general, is widely credited with having done a great deal to professionalize the office. This includes the use of an impartial selection team to screen applicants for his staff and the requirement that all assistant attorneys general work full time and give up any outside law practice.

It may be years, however, before an accurate assessment of the overall effectiveness of the Bellotti regime will be possible.

Competition was stiff for this year's list of world's Top Ten Tyrants

Here are this year's ratings of the Top Ten Tyrants.

Simply being a strongman engaged in the usual despotic pursuit of bloody repression is not enough to qualify for Top Ten honors.

While Saddam Hussein of Iraq runs a police state, persecutes a Kurdish minority and won points with the judges for stabbing his neighbor Iran in the back, he was disqualified because the Iraqis, insofar as anybody knows what Iraqis think, seem to like him.

Although engaged in a murderous war against his own Afghan people, Babrak Karmal was disqualified for relying on an excess of Russians to discourage the local citizenry from tearing his body to shreds.

The leaders of Vietnam and Cambodia, dead certain picks in years past, still have Top Ten potential but the old fire isn't there. In Cambodia, the indefatigably homicidal Pol Pot seems to have retired, and Vietnam exhibits signs of halfheartedness in the way it shoves unwanted members of the population out to sea in leaky boats.

Some dictators, while they got high marks for color, either were inept or lacked fire-in-the-belly malevolence. Cuba's Fidel Castro, Nicaragua's Daniel Ortega, Ghana's Flight Lt. Jerry Rawlings and Paraguay's Alfredo Stroessner fell into this category.

The Top Ten:

10. Gen. Augusto Pinochet, Chile.

Pinochet grabbed power the old-fashioned way: over the dead body of his predecessor, who may have committed suicide before it was committed for him. He has been promising an imminent return to civilian rule ever since. That was 13 years ago.

9. Lt. Col. Desi Bouterse, Suriname.

Bouterse gained high office and a promotion from sergeant by seizing power six years ago and has since worked assiduously to impoverish this small (pop. 350,000) and once prosperous South American nation. The population is not as large as it might be because Bouterse has executed some and terrified others into exile.

By Dale McFeatters

8. Gen. Samuel Doe, Liberia.

Like Pinochet, Doe took power over the dead body of his predecessor, who was murdered along with 13 other top officials in the transfer of power, and, like Bouterse, has awarded himself a promotion from sergeant. He got high marks for giving himself only 51 percent of the vote in a blatantly fraudulent election last November.

7. President Mobutu Sese Seko, Zaire.

Mobutu, who was a general before seizing power, has compiled a compelling record of corruption in his 21 years in office. He has shown a delightful capriciousness as a despot. He once ordered everybody in the country to change their names.

6. Whoever is in charge of Albania.

Under the late Enver Hoxha's harsh and total dictatorship, Albania achieved the unusual honor of not having a friend in the world. Albania loathed everybody. Although Hoxha died last April, his legacy of joyless oppression seems safe in the hands of his successors.

5. President Hafez Assad, Syria.

Assad shows the usual ruthlessness one expects of a top-shelf dictator. Faced with a religious uprising in the village of Hama, he bombed and bulldozed the entire town into gravel.

4. President Kim Il-Sung, North Korea.

Kim runs a ruthless police state that is a monument to the cult of personality. He is grooming his son, the aptly named Kim Il-Sung II, to be his successor.

Kim has been spoiling for a war with his neighbor to the south (where Chun Doo Hwan runs a standard dictatorship not yet up to Top Ten standards), and three years ago he almost got it when he blew up three South Korean Cabinet ministers, along with 13 other dignitaries, who were on a visit to Burma.

3. Col. Moammar Khadafy, Libya.

A small population, 3.6 million, puts limits on the number of people Khadafy can kill at home, but he more than makes up for it by murdering his political opponents abroad and by his open-handed generosity with money and weaponry to fellow nuts so they can kill people, too.

A terrible neighbor, he frequently invades Chad, meddles in the Sudan and threatens Egypt.

2. Lt. Col. Mengistu Haile Mariam, Ethiopia.

In less than 10 years at the helm, Mengistu and his Marxist colleagues have turned a daffy but harmless monarchy into an international basket case in which hundreds of thousands of people have needlessly died of starvation.

In addition to the usual savage suppression of opponents, Mengistu has endangered millions through a draconian land resettlement scheme intended to extinguish the last of his opponents.

1. Ayatollah Ruhollah Khomeini, Iran.

In seven short years, Khomeini has made his people, those he hasn't executed or exiled, figures of odium in the outside world; given his religion a bad name; enmeshed his nation in a bloody war which he has sent children to fight; and nearly bankrupted his nation in the process.

Ayatollah Khomeini: truly top of the tyrants.

Former union president explains police demonstrations

My name is Robert L. Magni. I have been a Newton Police officer for 17 years. I was previously the union president for four years. This letter is to try and explain the union's stand in their negotiations with the city.

In 1981 and 1982 a group was formed known as "solidarity." During this time, this group met with the mayor, Jim Hickey and Mr. Wilkenson. The three times we met, the city showed us charts with their projections for the future. The wage ofers were 5 percent and 5 percent. The unions were looking for 7 percent and 7 percent. Mr. Hickey and Mr. Wilkenson showed us a graph that projected in the year 1985 the city would be in the red. That is, broke!

But we all know the city had an $8 million surplus. In 1982 every union accepted the city's offer, except the police union because of unacceptable offers from the city. The union went through all the steps, but could not reach an agreement. Instead of negotiating, the city decided to arbitrarily give the police a raise of 5 percent and 5 percent over two years. The city drew up a contract which the union refused to sign. So, now the city is going by a contract that is dated 1982 to 1984. But, the union is going by their 1982 contract. Five years have passed and the police still do not have a contract.

I know of no one else going that long. I read in your papers, dated February 20th, 1986, that Mayor Mann is again going over his figures, due to cut backs that are coming and the relatively low amount of state aid. He just can't find any monies for the work force.

In 1984, due to proposition 2½ the city went broke to the tune of $8 million in surplus! I hope the mayor makes another mistake in 1986 with all the cutbacks and the low amount of state aid. Again this year, and next, the city work force will be asked to accept whatever the city will be offering, just to keep the city out of the red.

The members of the Newton Police Union are very, very angry and frustrated, as we feel five years is too long to be without a contract. The demonstrations are the only way we can bring our plight out in the open.

I am sorry if we inconvenience the public, but we must make our plight public knowledge. We cannot strike, and there is no longer compulsory arbitration, so the city can just delay and not honestly bargain with us.

I would welcome any suggestions on how to solve this problem of our helplessness!

Educational deficits increased by shortened school days

Open letter to Superintendent Strand:

Unfortunately prior professional commitments did not allow for my presence at the earlier public hearing nor the one scheduled for next week concerning the length of the elementary school day.

As by way of an introduction, I would like to share my background with you. Aside from being a parent of two children in the Newton Public Schools (Day and Franklin) and being committed to public school education, I served as the Franklin PTO President two years ago, (1983-1984) and in that capacity served on the all-city PTO Council. In addition, I have a Mass. teachers' certification in elementary education. I am a Ph.D. candidate in Educational Psychology at Boston College and I have worked for many years as a social work clinician and administrator in special needs schools, a hospital serving handicapped children and other experiences in the area of child development; cognitive as well as emotional and psychological. When you first were appointed to our system, I was the parent who raised the concern over the Tuesday and Thursday schedule when you visited the Franklin School.

As a parent who has always needed the assistance of child care programs, I am aware of how difficult it is for working parents to have a shortened school day. However, as difficult as it is, it is not impossible to find and make arrangements. I feel it is an insult and a smoke screen to offer the argument, as some have, that parents who require child care are the ones who are demanding an extended day. While this certainly may be a consideration, there are many of us who are primarily concerned with the implications of two half-days on our childrens' educational and cognitive development.

Certainly it is important for teachers to attend workshops and in-services; just as it is in any profession. Professionals have an obligation to keep their skills up-to-date and current. Other communities have found a way to ensure this continuing education without sacrificing valuable time for direct work with the children on such a consistent and frequent basis as is currently occurring in the Newton system.

As one who was not raised in Newton, but who had heard of the reputation of the school system during my growing years, I am appalled at the lack of strength that exists in my child's basic skill areas; the youngest is now in 5th grade. A number of neighbors have shared my concerns that our children have deficits in the areas of math, spelling, grammar, etc.; and have been left to reach the conclusion that the system is overrated and riding on past laurels.

It is my belief that children need consistent and daily reinforcement, particularly on the elementary level, in the foundations that form good educational and cognitive skills. New techniques cannot be applied by teachers if they are not with the children for an adequate amount of time during the school week. Time that is now being used to offer extra help to children who are having difficulty might not be needed on Tuesdays and Thursdays if at least one of those days were extended to a full school day. The other day could be used as teacher in-service and workshop time. I believe this model exists in other communities.

At a time when educational deficits are attracting national attention, when other countries already have longer school days than the average American child, for our community to have less time during the day than any other Massachusetts community is of great concern. The issue is not the total amount of school days (180) but the way in which the time is allocated and utilized.

While I realize extending the school day has many implications, I would urge you and the elementary administration and the School Committee to seriously consider extending at least one of the two days to a full day schedule.

United Way raised $39 million

Thanks to the support of thousands of area residents and the local media, the United Way of Massachusetts Bay has completed the most successful fundraising drive in our 50-year history. We raised a record $39,010,240 — an 11 percent increase over last year — making this the fourth year in a row that we have topped our goal.

The United Way's West Region (19 communitites west of Boston) also topped its area goal, raising $1,369,488 to support many United Way agencies serving local residents.

In spite of a strong local economy, the need for food and shelter, day care, youth and elderly services, drug and alcohol abuse programs, and other vital services is greater than ever. This coming year, more than one million people in eastern Massachusetts — one out of every three — will be helped by 192 United Way agencies. These people include our families, our friends, our neighbors, and ourselves.

Through this successful campaign, we have given hope not only to the needy, but to our entire community. Our appreciation goes out to all contributors and voluteers who this year helped us to find a way.

Thanks to you, it does work for all of us.

'Death wish' keeps GOP in dire straits

By Edward F. King

The Massachusetts Republican Party is, as has been usual in recent years, in dire straits. No major Republican has announced for Governor or Lieutenant Governor; the party has not won a single statewide contest since 1970; only one member of the GOP represents Massachusetts in the National Congress and, most humiliating of all, the party of Lincoln has actually taken to advertising in newspapers for local legislative candidates.

Why? In view of the fact that President Reagan has carried Massachusetts in two consecutive elections, why is the local Republican Party in such bad shape?

There are many reasons for the moribund state of the GOP. One could probably write a book on the subject. But, since our space is limited, let us deal with only two of the factors that have led to the current lowly position of Massachusetts Republicans.

First, the credentials of the writer. I have been an elected member of a Republican Ward Committee. In 1968 I was elected to the Republican State Committee. I was re-elected in 1972. Twice I was a delegate to State Conventions. In 1974 I was the Chairman of the convention's platform committee. On two separate occasions I was appointed Vice Chairman of the Party. Finally, in 1978 I was endorsed by the Republican convention to be the party's candidate for governor.

To say that I learned a few things about my party would be an understatement. I discovered, for example, that various ethnic groups had been systematically frozen out of leadership. Irish, French, Jewish, and Italian Republicans were allowed to lick stamps and address envelopes but, with the exception of John Volpe, they were expected to "know their place."

Recent history is rich with the names of ethnic Republicans who could have expanded the party's base had they been nominated. Unfortunately, they were all defeated. Those with long memories will recognize the names John McCarthy, John Quinlan, Carroll Sheehan, Edward F. King, Peter McDowell, John Lakian, and Avi Nelson. Ethnics all. And losers all.

Republican nominees were usually named Sargent, Dwight, Herter, Sears, Lodge, Saltonstall, and Hatch.

In addition to missing the ethnic boat, Massachusetts Republicans blew it philosophically. While the country, and the state, were trending to the right, the State GOP kept nominating liberals. And they kept losing.

When the state screamed for a strong conservative candidate in 1978, it was the Domocrats who nominated a hard-line, anti-abortion, procapital punishment aspirant for governor. And, of course, he won. On what should have been a Republican platform.

Someday, someone will write the history of death wishes. When they do, Massachusetts Republicans will dominate the book.

ment, Hirsh says she began thinking of other things .

"I wasn't really interested in writing in high school," she recalls. "I became interested in college and a good deal of what I was doing professionally involved writing. But, because I was writing all day, I was too tired to write on my own at night. After three years in the Welfare Department, I began to think about writing on my own."

Inspired by the thought of becoming a successful author, Hirsh quit her job in April, 1976. She was toying with a mystery novel whose main character was based on a statehouse reporter she knew. It wasn't long, however, before both the character and her idealism about writing hit the skids. When offers from publishers were not forthcoming, Hirsh decided to scrap the mystery novel in favor of pursuing stories told by her Afghani friends a couple of years before.

"'Kabul' became my assignment from God," she says of her decision to go for broke with a story about Afganistan. "For years, I wasn't going to write about it, but my Afghani friends pushed me. I really became involved with people who were victims of history. It was a pivotal point for their country and I tried to see it through their eyes."

Despite the fact that her change in lifestyle included a move from a "nice little duplex to a rooming house with alcoholics," Hirsh stayed with her idea for six often bizarre years. While she will not discuss any of the Afghanis who helped her out of fear for their lives, she says the story behind the story is even more interesting.

"Truth is definitely stranger than fiction in this case," she says.

One of the reasons it took her so long, she adds, is that until the Soviet invasion, "there were no sources." In addition, because Afghanistan's borders have since been closed, information is a rare commodity — one reason why she says people in this country have so little interest in what is happening there.

"There is poison gas and bombing going on over there," she says. "One reason we hear so little about it in the news is that the country is closed to the press. If we cannot get cameras in, there are no visuals. If there are no visuals, there are no stories on the evening news. People don't really read articles in the press, so no one knows what is going on."

Hirsh quotes Russian author Joseph Brodsky to explain the apparent apathy in America toward the plight of the Afghanis.

"Brodsky says that racism is not just a question of color," she says, "but a refusal to identify with people who are different than ourselves."

There is another, darker issue Hirsh brings up as her Afghani birds begin chirping in the background.

"There is another question," she says. "There are theories about a tacit agreement between this country and the Soviet Union that we would stay out of Afghanistan because they consider it a Russian border state. It goes back certainly to Eisenhower and perhaps even to the Yalta conference."

The apathy in this country toward Afghanistan, Hirsh says, is an example of how the pendulum has swung back toward the Eisenhower years.

"We don't have things hitting the pavement over here in America," she says, "which makes it easy for people here not to think about it. The whole rest of the world is aware of what is happening, but nobody here thinks about it. Nobody cares because everything has become devalued. On television you hear, 'War in Afghanistan, buy a Chevy, whatever.' That's why people don't know more about Afghanistan. There is so much more global sophistication in an illiterate Egyptian on the streets of Cairo than there is here."

While the Ward and June Cleavers of the 80s play it safe with nice homes and fancy cars, Mimi Hirsh looks out the window of her two-room garrett in the South End she shares with husband and poet David Montenegro and wonders what will happen in the future if today's children fail to take risks.

"Violence on television today is like crackerjacks," she says. "We are seeing the banality of evil every night. The other thing I am concerned about is that kids today are being discouraged from taking risks and are told to play it safe and go into computers. I have a niece who is a great writer, but she says she will only write after she pursues another career. The people who should be doing what I am doing don't dare to do it anymore. They are getting stifled at an early age."

Cop pact talks are not binding teachers comes from state education grants, the city is in effect only paying the teachers what the police are being offered. In addition, he says that to increase the percentage of raises would prove disaterous to the city's financial health.

With both sides bogged down in rhetoric and unwilling to budge, Bornstein, a professor of management at UMASS-Amherst, will attempt to bridge the growing gap. According to Glenn, that may be unlikely because nothing Bornstein, who could not be reached for comment, recommends will be binding. Since the beginning of the contract dispute, Glenn has called for binding arbitration as a way to expedite the negotiating process. Mann, however, opposes it.

"Proposition 2½ eliminated binding arbitration," the mayor says. "If an arbitrator made a settlement beyond a city's ability to pay, obviously it could do tremendous damage to the delivery of services."

Glenn, however, says the lack of a final ruling is creating a morale problem among officers who are frustrated at not being able to reach an agreement.

Glenn has support in the Statehouse. Rep. Joseph DeNucci (D-Newton) says he is "very, very sympathetic" to police and firefighers.

"I am a strong supporter of binding arbitration for police and fire," he says. "Nothing illustrates the need for it more than what is going on in Newton. "I think it provides for a sane legal mechanism to deal with a labor dispute when an impasse occurs."

DeNucci says current state law puts the police and fire unions in a weakened bargaining position.

"By state law," he says, "police and firefighters are not allowed to strike. I support that for reasons of public safety. But because they cannot withhold their services, they have one less bargaining chip."

DeNucci says municipalities are using the concept of binding arbitration as a "red herring."

"You have to look at what binding arbitration really does," he says. "I believe the general public and city and town officials have used it as a red herring when they argue that it will hurt the city's financial condition."

DeNucci says he supports a bill in the Statehouse that would provide management and labor to come up with a last, best offer and have those offers decided upon by an independent state-appointed arbitrator.

"This bill would, in my opinion," he says, "allow for both sides to come up with a reasonable, realistic offer and I think it only approriate to get to that point by setting a devinitive deadline after all the fact finding and other problems have been addressed. I do not think this system will weigh too heavily on either labor or

Rep. Susan Schur (D-Newton), says she has mixed feelings.

"I have yet to see the bill," she says, "but I have very mixed feelings about the concept of binding arbitration. I don't like the impasse we have, but, with fiscal constraints that cities operate under, I am not eager to see something that would tie a city's hands that this can do."

While she understands the frustration union members are going through, Schur says binding arbitration is not a catch-all solution.

"There is no black and white," she says. "It is very hard to deal with these problems in absolutes. You can't just say that if binding arbitration comes back, everything will be fine."

Firefighters doubt progress probable

A firefighter, who now receives an annual salary of $21,993, would be paid $27,140 a year, he said. A lieutenant would receive $32,032, a captain $36,831 and an assistant fire chief $42,357, Kelliher said.

The city has to pay 22 percent of a firefighter's salary for retirement benefits, Kelliher said. Health insurance, life insurance and sick time are among the other benefits included to reach the $40,000 figure, he said.

The $40,000 figure is "undoubtedly among the highest costs in any community in the state" for a firefighter, Kelliher said.

"I don't know where he comes up with enough to equal $40,000," said Richard Ciccone, head of the firefighters' negotiating team, in response. "It's a numbers game, but it bothers me."

"We'll put some figures together and we'll have the right person do it," he added.

Ciccone took exception to statements and reports saying firefighters have taken a hard line because of the last teachers' contract.

Their most recent contract gave teachers raises of 7 percent in 1986 and 1987 and 6 percent in 1988.

That raise was fueled in part by state money from the education reform bill, to be paid over a two-year period. Mayor Theodore D. Mann has said the same state funds are not available for other unions.

Ciccone said the School Committee bargained in good faith and came to a reasonable settlement with teachers. Firefighters do not begrudge the teachers their settlement, he said.

"Education is very important," Ciccone said. "Is the mayor trying to imply the School Committee is incompetent?"

Ciccone said he believes firefighters are entitled to the same wage hike. But current offers from the city are not even close, he said.

"The school side apparently has a bargaining process they go through," he said. "The problem is this side of the city doesn't bargain; it dictates."

He also took exception to Mann's statement that the 2 percent of the teachers' raises funded by state money would cost the city around $20 million over nine years if it was offered to all municipal employees.

"When you sign a contract, nine years later with inflation it's always going to sound like a lot of money," he said.

Despite the state money, the city will eventually have to pay for the additional 2 percent granted to teachers, he said.

The one-time education reform bill money gave the city the opportunity to provide the funds for 1986 and 1987, leaving the city to pay for those raises after each year, Ciccone said.

He doubted how effective the JLMC negotiator will be because the negotiator lacks power to force a settlement, Ciccone said.

Permit parking OK'd

parking only to those who live on the street. After a review by the Public Works and Traffic Commissioners, the board would make a decision. If granted, residents would be issued two resident permit parking stickers per household and an additional two visitor permits.

Boston College was the target of much of the rhetoric in the debate. Vance pointed to the parking cruch created by students, faculty and BC fans during football games as well as functions like Mayor Theodore Mann's annual Prayer Breakfast and graduation. In addition, Vance said that because neighboring Brighton already has permit parking, many using BC facilities would rather park in Newton than face a ticket in Brighton.

The board also voted 13-5 to deny a motion to reconsider an amendment to the petition giving Police Chief William Quinn the right to allow parking on restricted streets and prohibit parking on non-restricted streets. Vance, who introduced the motion, said he did so to protect it in the event Jefferson's motion was successful. Alderman Richard McGrath, who also supported the reconsideration motion, said he was against giving the chief the legal right to do things "he has been doing illegally for the last 11 years."

'Pinning teachers against parents'

Schools' early dismissal under dispute

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The pendulum has swung back and forth between teachers and parents who, for the most part, disagree on the issue of elementary school early-dismissal times on Tuesdays and Thursdays.

The School Committee must decide whether those school days should be extended or if the schedule should remain as it is.

According to parent Amy Witkim, the issue is "pinning teachers against parents."

Superintendent of Schools Dr. John Strand recommends the School Committee maintain the present schedule for grades 1 through 6, but recommends the kindergarten school day be extended by at least one hour.

According to Strand, teachers need the Tuesday and Thursday early dismissals for professional development, class preparation and curriculum enrichment.

"My personal judgment is that for the small amount of time we would gain by extending the school days, we would lose much more on staff development, which guarantees the quality of education we are so proud of in Newton," Strand said.

Both teachers and parents shared their opinions with the School Committee at a special hearing last week.

Angier School teacher Dan Sweedland said early dismissal days give teachers time to communicate with one another through joint planning, which will serve the "betterment of education."

"I have never worked somewhere where there is such an incredible professional climate," Sweedland said.

"We should not, and cannot, give up such an integral part of what makes our school system so special," said Stephen Silverman, a teacher at Bowen School.

Teachers constantly seek ways to increase the quality of education, and early dismissal days help them do just that, Angier School teacher Barbara Butterworth said.

> 'Don't say you're superior because of the time teachers utilize on Tuesdays and Thursdays, because it's just not the case.'
> Sima Kirsztajn

"Teachers in this school system are not content teaching kids some lessons that they taught five, 10 or maybe 15 years ago," Butterworth said.

Parent Sima Kirsztajn said she doesn't "buy" the teachers' arguments. Kirsztajn is a teacher in a school system that borders Newton.

"I think this school system has a very elitist point of view, and if I weren't a teacher I would be impressed with their arguments and say, 'Wow! This is a wonderful school and we should support the needs of our teachers,'" Kirsztajn said. "We do everything and more at our school system without losing four hours of the school week. And I think we have a school comparable to Newton."

Kirsztajn also said the School Committee has to look at the issue of day care because, "It's not right to expect working parents to pay for day care until their children are in the sixth grade.

"Don't say you're superior because of the time teachers utilize on Tuesdays and Thursdays, because it's just not the case," Kirsztajn said.

On behalf of single parents and two-career families, parent Cynthia Benn said the early dismissals "penalize people who are not wealthy." Although Benn said she found teachers' arguments convincing, new economic and social constraints place increased pressure on financially struggling families.

"I'm a working mother, but I'm not doing it for self-actualization or because that's what women are doing these days. I'm doing it for survival," Benn said. "Just as you nurture their minds, we have to nurture their bodies. A huge proportion of my earnings goes toward day care, and I don't know how much longer my husband and I can afford that."

Parent Nancy Sharby said she does not sympathize with the teachers' plight.

"I'm a physical therapist and I work a 40-hour week and I get paid the same amount that Newton teachers do, but I do all of my preparation and and paperwork at home," Sharby said. "I have no sympathy at all for them."

The challenge facing the School Committee is for them to strike a balance between the needs of teachers and the concerns of parents, parent Beth Smith said.

"Both sides have very legitimate concerns," Smith said. "We need a better balance. Perhaps we can extend the school day some and keep some time for professional development."

This issue has been continuing for more than three years and it is time for some changes to be made, Witkim said.

"There is inertia in the school system and no one wants change, but I think it's time," Witkim said. "You, the School Committee, in your decision, have to show both sides that you hear what both are saying, and I think you have a big task at that."

The School Committee plans to make a decision before April 14. Originally, a decision was due by March 10, but School Committee members said the issue called for further discussion and deliberation.

Fire, police picketers block rush hour traffic

By David Weber
Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON — Approximately 125 police officers, firefighters and supporters of the two groups picketed last Thursday afternoon, blocking rush hour traffic in West Newton Square. The picketers were demonstrating against what they believe is the city's reluctance to bargain with them in good faith.

More than 30 officers from the day shift, which ends at 3:30 p.m., were held over by Chief William F. Quinn to direct traffic through the square.

Most of the officers who were held over would have joined the fellow officers in the picket, according to Gerard Mahoney, a member of the police association bargaining committee. "They're with us in spirit though," said one picketing officer.

Alderman Richard J. McGrath, who was present to observe the demonstration, estimated that the city would spend almost $3,000 in overtime costs for the officers being held over to direct traffic.

Police association President Lynda Glenn said the city has agreed to allow a mediator to be brought in on March 6 in an attempt to facilitate an agreement, but she said the city will not agree to allow the mediator's decision to be binding on both parties.

"We're not optimistic," she said.

Thursday's demonstration was the third in two weeks, the other two occurring during rush hour in Newtonville Square and Newton Centre Square.

Mahoney said, "We're not happy we have to inconvenience these people, but we have no options."

Glenn said that the fact that 18 months of negotiations have not produced an agreement between the city and the two unions is proof that public safety is not the chief priority of Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

The city has offered the unions yearly salary increases of 5 percent over a three-year period. The unions have turned down that proposal, citing the latest contract for the teachers which provides for salary increases of 7, 7, and 6 percent over a three-year period.

Employees of the Department of Public Works earlier this year accepted the city's across the board offer of 5 percent increases.

While acknowledging that the state provided money for 2 percent of teachers' salary increases over the first two years of their contract, Mahoney said the 6 percent increase in the third year will be footed entirely by the city and will be based on the salaries which were increased by 7 percent in each of the two previous years.

Mahoney also said the city unfairly claims that police officers are already well-paid by factoring in their health benefits and money received for working paid details, for which the city receives 10 percent of the officers' hourly rate.

Aquino friends mark dramatic victory

"Ninoy is proud of us and, again, he did not die in vain," Lichauco said as she fought back tears.

Many of those gathered at the church walked there through the bitter cold from Aquino's former home at 175 Commonwealth Ave., which has been made a memorial to the slain opposition leader.

The first floor of the house nearly burst at the seams both before and after the mass, as hundreds of friends of the Aquino family celebrated their bloodless overthrow of Marcos with champagne and dozens of reporters jostled for space.

Mayor Theodore D. Mann toured the home with Dr. Steven G. Agular, president of the Aquino Memorial Foundation.

Mann, who fought in the Philippines during World War II, expressed hope that Cory Aquino can smooth over any remaining rifts and "move the nation toward peace."

Sally Lichauco, 72, whose husband was a partner in Benigno Aquino's law practice, described the popular revolution as a product of fate.

"I've always been very optimistic. After all, right is right," said Lichauco, who has faith in Cory Aquino's ability to lead the nation.

"I think she's going to do very well. The Filipinos are great Catholics and the Lord doesn't abandon his people. See the great army it created in just a short time. And they didn't use any weapons at all," she said with a wide smile.

Licuacho does not believe Filipinos should retaliate against Marcos or bring him to trial for his suspected role in Benigno Aquino's assassination.

"Filipinos, by nature, are very compassionate. You can see Cory Aquino as an example. Marcos is a very brilliant man who just got out of hand," she added.

The people in Manila greeted Aquino's rise to power in the same way Americans observe Independence Day, according to Susan Robey, 25, a University of Massachusetts student from Somerville.

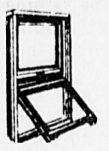

Robey received a firsthand report on the joyous celebration during a phone conversation with her father, who works in the Philippines for the World Health Organization.

"He said there were a lot of very happy people in the streets cheering and singing and lighting off firecrackers. They can't believe it happened so fast," Robey said.

The Friendly Visitor Program

Lending comfort to their peers

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Seniors are helping seniors, providing emotional support and companionship for each other, and perhaps a listening ear or friendly smile.

The Friendly Visitor Project arranges visitors for elderly people who are housebound, handicapped or simply in need of a kind friend to visit them weekly, according to Coordinator Lovicy Kevorkian.

"Everyone needs companionship, especially older people who have physical limitations and who aren't able to meet their own needs," Kevorkian said.

The fulfillment of the seniors in the program is a two-way street, Kevorkian said. Both the visitors and the people they befriend develop a warm relationship.

Kevorkian, 79, and her senior volunteers are determined to help fellow elderly citizens who are less fortunate than they are. Kevorkian is legally blind and has difficulty walking after suffering a stroke two years ago, but her physical limitations have not stopped her from serving others.

> 'I think it's a very exciting program. When people give to each other it's always exciting.'

Seniors who want visitors to come to their home are assessed by Kevorkian, to provide a compatible companion for them.

"We assess the person's situation, background, history and interests so we can make an intelligent choice and provide them with the best visitor to answer their needs," Kevorkian said. "Every case is different because everyone's needs are different."

Often relatives of an elderly person want a visitor for their loved one, but the senior is not willing to accept the service, she added.

"We only visit those who want us to come. We respect the wishes of the individual, even though we recognize their relatives are only trying to help," Kevorkian said. "If the individual does not want the visits, they won't get anything beneficial from it."

Sister Anna Weigl, 83, a volunteer visitor, said visiting elderly people is her ministry in life.

"I get a lot out of the visits because I love old people. I love to listen to them talk and I let them tell me their story," Sister Anna said. "A close relationship develops and we become family."

One of Sister Anna's friends lives on the same street as she does, so she is able to walk to her house for visits, but must take a taxi to see her other companion. Sister Anna has been visiting her companions for about 10 years, she said.

"Since one of them lives so close, I am able to see her two or three times a week, but in this weather I can only see my other friend every other week," she said. "I'm hoping in the spring to be more active."

Volunteer visitor Ellie Burtin, 70, said she's not sure who benefits the most from the visits.

"I visit a man every week at University Hospital who had a back operation, and he isn't doing very well, but he's such a bright man," Burtin said. "I'm sure I get more from him than he gets from me. It's wonderful because we develop a feeling of doing things for each other, which is beneficial both ways.

Burtin said she expects fulfillment from her visits because it's what keeps her going.

"I really enjoy the people I visit and they are mutually beneficial relationships. If it's only a one way friendship it becomes a drain and a drag," Burtin said.

Kevorkian said the program is always in need of visitors to enable her to guarantee companions to elders in need.

"We feel awfully guilty when we have someone who needs our services and we aren't able to supply them with a friendly visitor," Kevorkian said.

Requests for visitors comes from health, social and welfare agencies, from family members or from older persons themselves. Elders interested in either having or becoming a volunteer visitors should call the Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP) at 969-5906.

Some elders need an encouraging push to live a more active life, and the program helps them do just that, Kevorkian said.

"I think it's a very exciting program. When people give to each other it's always exciting," Kevorkian said.

The battle against age discrimination

ed to hire Larus, even though he was willing to take a $4,000 cut in pay.

"They told me the next day 'We don't know you well enough. We need more time,'" Larus said.

Luck finally came around when a university offered Larus a visiting professorship to teach a new course. In addition, Larus started his own business.

"It's not on the New York Stock exchange, but the challenge is there. It's the challenge — the novelty — that I find most exciting," he said.

Offering the employers "side of the coin" was Digital Equipment Corporation's Elizabeth Fitter, regional personnel manager. She said Digital maintains the belief that "the best defense against discrimination is an enlightened offense." The company, she said, creatively manages its aging workforce by listening to their needs, and maintaining the belief that every employer wants to be productive.

As Regional Director with the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission, Charles Looney represented the federal arm to which people could turn if they experienced discrimination.

He explained that older workers may be the first to go in a non-unionized company, particularly when a young management team takes over. "They'll say 'We've got to get some young blood around here,'" according to Larus.

One indication of imminent layoff, he said, is a sudden drop in the performance level of older workers on their review sheets.

After a while management will say, "'Your performance deteriorated to the point where we can no longer use you,'" said Looney.

Older workers are also laid off because they make higher pay than the younger ones, said Barbara Rosenthal, executive director of Jewish Vocational Services.

And, on the job, older people are passed over for advancement, she said, as companies favor the youthful, energetic types.

Off the job, older individuals looking for work are "caught in a bind," said Rosenthal. "Even when the market is good, the people having a hard time are older individuals because the available jobs are at the lower end of the pay scale. In mid-life, you need more than an entry-level position."

Another explanation for their difficulty in finding employment is that employers do not want to pay pensions for older people, said Rosenthal. In addition, employers worry that older employees will raise health insurance rates and will be ill more often. Also, companies hire younger workers over the older ones, who command higher salaries.

Further, she said, middle-level positions — the ones sought by older people — are being cut back. This places older job hunters in a "no-win situation," Rosenthal continued, because even if they settle for less pay, "the employer will say they're over qualified."

Adding further hindrance to their job search is age discrimination, "which is very subtle," Rosenthal said. "Older people see it where it isn't. If the perception is there, they behave as if there will be discrimination."

One man at the seminar, who declined to identify himself, said he decided to attend the discussion to learn more about his "rights." The man had been forced into an early retirement when the company eliminated his department and said he didn't qualify for any other position within the firm.

Another seminar participant, Bernard Tack, 61, was discharged from his position in corporate accounting in November when the company went out of business. Although his subsequent job search has been difficult, he said, "I can't say I've been eliminated because of discrimination." However, he noted, he does receive "letters that say I'm over qualified."

Tack, who was distributing his resume following the discussion, said he mostly attended the seminar because he was curious about job discrimination and to establish contacts.

In fact, Tack, perhaps, could benefit from the "three canes," or rules, for job searchers that Larus outlined during his talk.

First, he said, be adventurous and a risk taker. "We're no longer green youth (age 20 to 25) with nothing behind us," he said. Older workers have much more experience than those fresh out of college.

Second, "don't worry about failure," he continued. "If you do fail, decide what you've learned from it. Deal with rejection openly. Talk about it to the correct person."

Wives, mistresses, and boyfriends are not necessarily good people with whom to discuss these feelings, he said. "You need someone who can be aemotional, who can give good advice."

Larus' last recommendation was for older job searchers was to have a sense of perspective. When rejected, one should realize that the person hired may have been more qualified, he said.

"Even if you're quick to anger and you see age discrimination around you, it may not be so," said Larus.

Indeed, said Larus, "No wise man ever wished to be younger and yet do I."

Pro-Israel PAC funds flow freely into Frank's coffers

NEWTON — Congressman Barney Frank, D-Newton, received more money from pro-Israel political action committees (PACS) than any other congressman or senator in Massachusetts, according to a study done by the private political watch-dog group Common Cause.

Common Cause said that since 1981, 65 PACS "which advocate strong U.S. support of Israel" gave more than $6 million in campaign contributions to senators and congressmen..

Pro-Israel PAC contributions, Common Cause said, "increased nine times between 1980 and 1984 elections" while contributions to political candidates by all PACs only doubled during this period.

Common Cause President Fred Wertheimer said, "An examination of pro-Israel PACs provides a classic case study of the PAC problem in our political system–the proliferation of PACs, the increase of PAC dollars, the concentration of interest group money in key cogressional committees and the single-minded focus of PAC giving."

Frank has been pro-Israel from his first campaign for Congress saying the United St6ates should support "the only Democracy in the Middle east."

Frank received $10,000 from pro-Israel PACS in 1981-82 when he had a tough campaign against Republican Margaret Heckler and $2,500 in 1983-1984 when he faced lesser opposition.

Republican Congressman Silvio Conte received only $200 in 1981-82, but $5,250 in the last election.

Congressmen receiving nothing from pro-Israel PACs included Chester Atkins, James Early, Edward Boland and Brian Donnelly, according to Common Cause.

The woman reported that she was startled when she saw a man's hand on the windowsill of her bedroom window and when she yelled, the hands disappeared, according to police.

From the front of the house, the woman saw a white man dressed in black walking swiftly down the street.

Local man heads Shriners temple

By Jason H. Korell

NEWTON — No matter what job Ralph S. Cohen tackles, it is with the zeal of improving the life of people, and "what better accomplishment can there be in life than helping children?" Ralph asks, in more of a rhetorical declaration of his lifetime aim.

A month ago Cohen was elected to the lofty position of "Illustrious Potenate" (president) of Aleppo Temple, the 13,000-member Shriners who, along with 900,000 Shriners around the world, operate 22 hospitals for children in North America, 19 of which help crippled children and three Shrine Burns Hospitals for the treatment of children with serious burns.

Under his leadership, Aleppo Temple has just launched a reach-out campaign to discover an additional 2,500 children who could be receiving treatment at the two Shrine hospitals in Massachusetts.

To receive help from the Shriners, no one has to ask, "How much will it cost?" because all treatment is free, and there are no gimmicks.

For 63 years Shriners Hospitals have been dedicated to helping children lead happier, more productive lives, according to the new potentate. Since 1922, approximately 300,000 crippled and burned children have been cured or substantially helped by the free medical care they have received through one or more of the Shrine Hospitals.

During the 63 years the hospital system has been in existence, the Shrine of North America has spent approximately $988 million operating the hospitals and nearly $214 million on construction costs.

Since their first hospital opened there have been approximately 383,208 operations performed, 7,089,669 physical therapy treatments given, 372,095 braces and posthesis applied, 4,522,525 X-rays and photographs taken and 3,009,230 out-patient clinic visits.

In 1985, 17,691 new patient applications were approved by the 22 hospitals. Since their establishment, more than 17,722,105 patient days have been recorded at the orthopaedic hospitals and 499,398 in the three burns institutes, which originally opened in the 1960s. The average length of stay for orthopaedic patients in 1985 was 19 days and 23 days for acute burn patients.

Cohen was born in Trenton, N.J., Dec. 3, 1919, and attended public schools there. He served with the U.S. Army Air Corps 1943-1946, during World War II.

He is treasurer of Dexter Beef Company in New Market Square, Boston, and was instrumental in the move of many of the meat companies which once operated in Faneuil Hall, when that historic site was reconditioned to become part of the Faneuil Hall Marketplace. He was an officer of the new wholesale meat complex at New Market.

His sensitivity to young people's needs is ongoing. This is exemplified through his assistance to Hebrew College, Brookline, where he is an honorary life trustee with a scholarship established in his name. In addition, he has served as youth director and chairman of New England United Synagogue Youth Committee.

Before he moved to Newton, he was active in Milton affairs for more than 30 years where he was president of Temple Shalom, as well as chief executive of Temple Israel in Hull and a 20-year member of the Auxiliary Police doing traffic duty at school crossings. He has been a member of the Elks for 45 years and is a past commander of the Jewish War Veterans.

Illustrious Potentate Ralph S. Cohen, with the support of the 13,000 members of Aleppo Temple, is increasing the Shriners' commitment to the community with new programs of family-related activities ranging from circuses to football games and rodeos, all to help Shriners raise funds to support their hospitals for children.

"We're even planning for drum and bugle competitions, marathons and road races and big band (swing) dance jamborees," Ralph commented. "The Shriners are like the U.S. Marines, proud and dedicated, and willing to work hard for others."

What Cohen refers to as "The World's Greatest Philanthropy," (the Shriners) has amassed over a billion dollars in endowments, and 93 percent of the interest from the endowment is used to operate their hospitals. It takes another $167 million annually to keep the hospitals in shape. About 7 percent of the total cost of operation and maintenance is raised annually by Shriners through a variety of activities, such as the Shrine Football Classic scheduled this year for June 21, the circus May 5-11 and the rodeo next fall.

Cohen concluded by stressing the Shriners' ongoing commitment to "spread the message that we exist to help children, that we care for and cure crippled and burned children, that we have committed $11 million a year to medical research in the orthopaedic and burns fields and that all of our services are absolutely free."

the eye of the tiger

At Newton North High School, computers are giving deaf students the key to learning.

What makes this program so important, its creators say, is the difficulty hearing impaired students traditionally have with the English language.

According to Nancy Feldman, the school's teacher for the deaf and the hearing impaired, sign language symbols do not differentiate between tenses, adding to the confusion for deaf students.

Before implementation of "Tigerwriter," Feldman accompanied Pasackarnis and her other students to mainstream English classes, where she would interpret for her students by flashing sign language.

By taking the students out of English classes to work on the "Tigerwriter" program, they can get more direct attention from teachers, who, in turn, can focus on the individual needs of students.

"We know the system can be improved, and we're still trying to get all the bugs out," said John Fernandes, English teacher and one of the program designers. "Most importantly, this program caught the interest and curiosity of our special needs students. It's a change of pace from the traditional classroom setting, and we've found that these kids are much more motivated in this kind of setting."

Feldman is more direct. "Tigerwriter" lets students progress at their own pace, she said. It also allows her the luxury of quickly identifying the predominant needs of each student.

Tom Bransfield, a hearing impaired student though not completely deaf, said he prefers writing on the computer as opposed to writing on paper.

"There is less pressure because I don't have raise my hand to ask a teacher for help," Bransfield said. "The computer gives me the answers."

Feldman, via computer, can print out the scores of how many problems each student answered correctly and incorrectly. But she stressed "Tigerwriter" is being used as an educational tool, not a grading medium.

"Mostly, this is just to help me to identify the needs of each student," she explained. "We're not interested in grading them on this basis."

Along with Fernandes and Feldman, Paul Shapiro, a math teacher at Newton North and the school system's computer service coordinator for secondary education and computer systems analyst Dr. Christina Zarcadoolas researched and developed "Tigerwriter" in eight months.

"Most people we talked to didn't think we'de be able to pull this off," Fernandes said. "We worked around the clock for eight months, and we've created a totally innovative, fast and efficient program."

Two Newton North students, Darryl Brown and Anthony Scipione, helped program the computer with various fun, and sometimes funny, lessons.

"These two boys are so bright and they were a great help in giving us creative lessons," Feldman said. "They knew how to keep making the lessons fun for students without allowing them to take shortcuts."

Fernandes said they made sure "Tigerwriter" did not "eliminate the teacher from the instructional equation." Feldman said it is much easier to teach her students with the computer because the teacher and student ratio is much smaller.

"It's much easier to see how students progress with the computer," Feldman said. "The computer allows me to see where my students need help, and I can also identify and help them build their strengths."

Before designing this system, Fernandes said they looked around for a computer program to address the needs they were interested in, but nothing was available in the market.

The "Tigerwriter" team sent a proposal to the state in hopes of getting a grant to design the computer software program. The state awarded Newton North a $10,000 grant.

"We found no one who was doing anything of this sort," Fernandes said. "We've come up with a new tutorial approach for special needs kids."

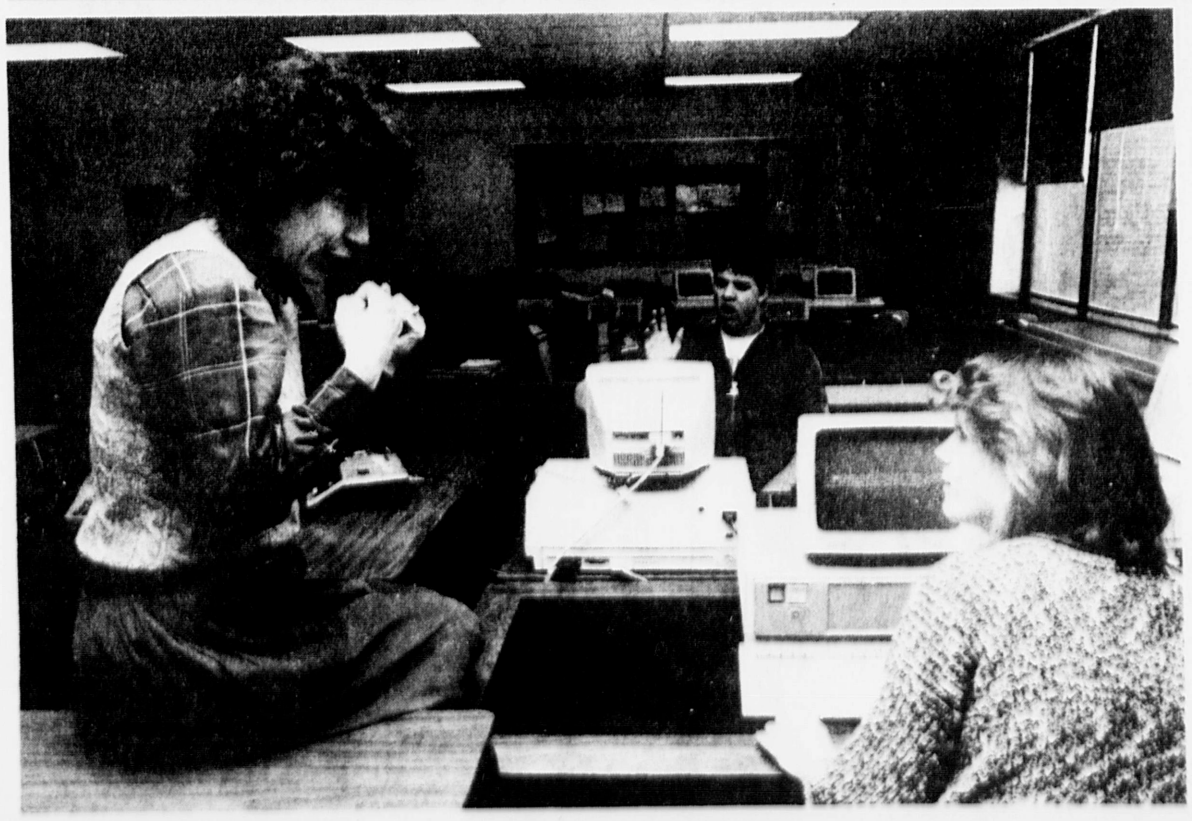

Members of the "Tigerwriter" team traveled to Rochester, N.Y., where their is a reknown school for the deaf, to research their project.

"There were a lot of experimental programs at the college level. We found there was activity, but not productivity in this area," Fernandes said.

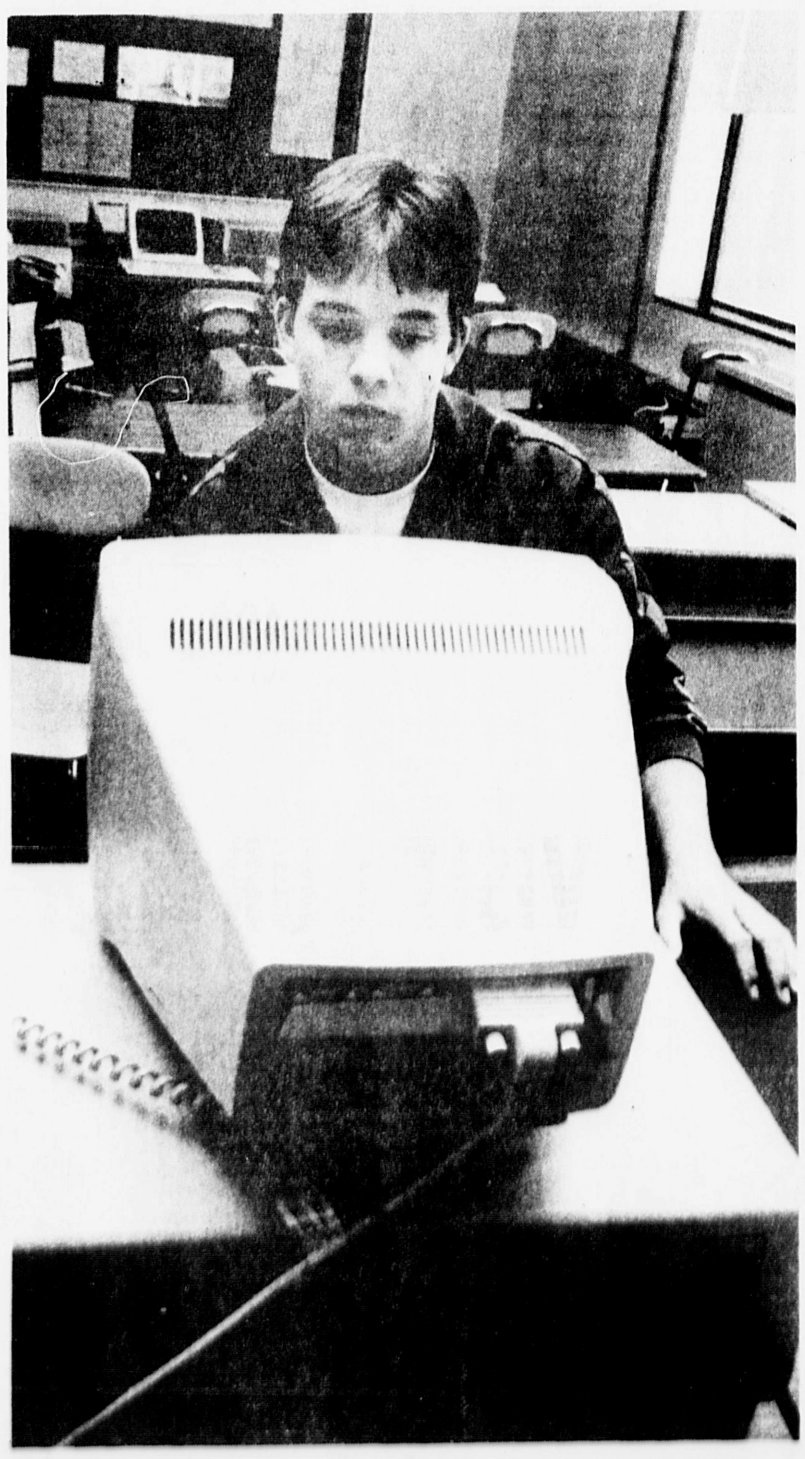

During the field testing of "Tigerwriter" in October, Fernandes said almost all of the students found the program stimulating and fun. Compared to their previous performance in class, students worked on their computers and assignments for longer periods of time.

Field testing also proved that students increased the amount of spontaneous writing they did, and furthermore, they were more likely to express personal feelings on the computer as opposed to writing with pencil and paper.

'This program caught the interest and curiosity of our special needs students. It's a change of pace from the traditional classroom setting, and we've found that these kids are much more motivated....'

Feldman explains computer commands to Pasackarnis in sign language.

Tom Bransfield deep in thought at his computer terminal.

Girl Scouts reach campaign goal

NEWTON — Patriots' Trail Girl Scout Council volunteers have successfully reached their goal in the Council's $2.5 million Capitol Campaign. The campaign was launched in March, 1984 to raise funds to renovate and restore council-operated camps and community centers in Massachusetts and New Hampshire.

The Capital Campaign was chaired by Boston Gas President John Bacon and former Scandinavian Design President Judy George. Under their leadership, more than 500 campaign volunteers solicited funds from corporations, foundations, small business and Girl Scout families and friends. Fund-raising activities ranged from direct solicitations and phonathons to special events and promotions.

Renovation and construction work, financed by campaign dollars, is currently underway at several Patriots' Trail camps and community centers. Cedar Hill Outdoor Center in Waltham is the primary recipient of campaign funding, and will receive more than one million dollars in property restoration and renovation. Camp Virginia in Bolton has completed renovation work which included a restored dining hall, expanded waterfront area and two new tent units. Several South Shore Community Centers have also been renovated and upgraded from campaign funds.

Patriots' Trail Girl Scout Council is the largest council in New England and the seventh largest council in the nation. It serves more than 37,000 girl and adult volunteers in 65 cities and towns in the greater Boston area.

The $2.5 million Capital Campaign is the first major fundraiser of its kind in the 70-year history of girl scouting in Massachusetts.

Reading to kids talk planned

NEWTON — Best-selling author, Jim Trelease, will address parents, teachers, and the general public on Wednesday, March 12, at the Solomon Schechter Day School, beginning at 7:30 p.m. Author of "The Read-Aloud Handbook", Trelease will speak on "Are You Reading Aloud to Your Young Child Only?"

During his 20 years as an award-winning artist and writer for a New England Daily newspaper, Trelease spent considerable time as a classroom volunteer, discussing the joys of reading. In 1979, he self-published a 30-page booklet for parents and teachers on the subject of reading aloud. In 1982, Penguin Books assigned him to write an expanded edition. A second edition was published in 1985. "The Read-Aloud Handbook" was on The New York Times Best Seller List for 17 weeks, with over a half million copies in print.

In his presentation, Trelease looks beyond the declining national literacy problems to the encouraging results when parents and teachers serve as positive reading role models. Trelease traces the need for reading aloud, (from cradle to adolescence), citing dozens of titles and demonstrating the techniques involved.

Trelease has lectured for most of the major American reading and library associations, as well as more than a hundred parent groups each year.

The Solomon Schechter Day School PTA is delighted to have Jim Trelease as a guest speaker, continuing its tradition of enrichment for parents, teachers and students.

A friend to consumers

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — All is not lost for consumers who feel they've been taken for a ride by their landlords, car mechanics, salesmen or other assorted businesses, according to coordinators of the Newton-Brookline Consumer Affairs Office.

The staff and volunteers in the Newton City Hall office serve as mediators to settle consumer complaints against businesses, Consumer Affairs Office coordinator Mim Cole said.

The office boasts a 70 percent success rate, saving consumers approximately $80,000 a year, Cole said.

"We're not lawyers or judges, as we're not authorized to give legal advice," Cole explained. "Our job is to assist consumers who have reached a stumbling block with the businesses they are dealing with."

Newton-Brookline Office of Consumer Affairs recently received a $17,000 consumer aid grant from the state, to be used to continue offering free mediation services for consumer complaints involving Newton or Brookline residents or businesses.

"We sift through complaints and try to determine all the pertinent facts and then we try to bring both sides together to reach an agreement," coordinator Judy Zohn said.

According to Zohn and Cole, auto repair complaints are the most difficult to settle because of the technical nature of the problems.

"In these situations we have to seek the advice of professionals because we're not equipped to determine whether or not a car's problem has been misdiagnosed or fixed incorrectly," Zohn said.

On several occasions, the office has been able to get refunds on new and used cars consumers purchased from dealerships.

If buyers follow the proper steps under the Lemon Law for new cars and the Lemonade Law for used cars, the chances of getting refunds for defective vehicles is far greater, Zohn said.

According to Zohn, it is important to have a car inspected within seven days of the purchase if the Lemonade Law is to apply.

"People don't know enough about their rights when they buy used cars," Zohn said. "If people follow the initial steps their rights are set into motion under the Lemonade Law."

According to Cole, the law works if people have the patience to follow it.

Tenant and landlord problems — such as nonpayment of rent, deductions from security deposits for alleged damages and the return of security deposits — also can be resolved through the consumer office.

"Sometimes landlord-tenant misunderstandings can be settled through our mediators rather than seeking court action as the first alternative," Cole said.

The consumer office considers itself a "conduit of information," mediating problems without bias or aggravated emotion.

"We deal with the concrete facts and take the emotional element out of the issue," Zohn said.

The office does not assume the consumer is always right, Cole said.

"A lot of people call and assume that we believe their complaints, regardless of the businesses' side of the story, but that's not always the case," Cole said.

According to Zohn, businesses are responsive to the consumer office and are willing to settle their differences with consumers.

Often businesses are more responsive to large organizations, especially when they are affiliated with the Attorney General's office, Zohn said.

"People are intimidated by big business and often try to call them to air their complaints but they seem to get the runaround," Zohn said. "Somehow a group, rather than the individual, can have more success in these areas."

(Those who would like to volunteer to assist the Consumer Affairs Office can call Mim Cole at 552-7205.)

Appraisal required to give property to charity

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

Some years ago a piece of property was left to me. It has increased substantially in price, and I wonder whether I would do better by giving it to charity and taking a charitable deduction than by selling it. How do I go about giving it away and do I need to have it appraised?

M.B. Boston

Dear M.B.:

It has been well established that donations of appreciated property are an effective method of fulfilling your charitable interests.

Charitable contributions are based on the value of the property at the time of the gift. With a gift of cash or publicly traded securities, the value of the gift is precisely determinable. But with real estate, non-traded securities, art works, publishing rights, etc., there is no clear value.

Suppose you had inherited a small farm, had no interest in farming it personally and had rented it out over the years. Gradually, the land value increased and suddenly, a new highway makes the value shoot up. If you sell, there will be a substantial capital gains tax to pay. If you were to donate the property to the qualified charity of your choice, they would not have a tax problem. The charity would be free to continue renting the property, or to sell. But before you make the gift, you are required to have the property appraised.

The Deficit Reduction Tax Act of 1984 tightened the rules governing charitable donations of non-cash property. If the claimed value of the donated property is more than $5,000, then a "qualified appraisal" must be obtained and a summary of it attached to the return to substantiate the deduction.

The appraisal must satisfy the following conditions: It cannot be made earlier than 60 days before the date of the contribution. A qualified appraiser must prepare, draft and sign the appraisal. The fee for this appraisal must not be based on a percentage of the property's appraised value.

To qualify, the appraiser must declare in the appraisal summary that he or she is held out to the public as an appraiser; is qualified to make appraisals of the type of property being valued; and understands that a false or fraudulent overstatement of the property's value could subject him to the "aider and abbeter" penalty. The appraiser cannot be someone who is a party to the transaction or who is employed by the donor of the recipient. For example, the dealer from whom you purchased the property, or one of the dealer's employees, would be barred from acting as an appraiser for tax purposes.

There is no requirement that the appraiser be approved by the IRS, belong to a professional organization or conform to any educational or licensing standard. Hence, the taxpayer is relieved of any duty to search and verify such qualifications to prevent the deduction from being denied for failure to utilize a qualified appraiser. But these same educational, professional and licensing factors might be very important should the IRS challenge the property's valuation. If the taxpayer decided to litigate the issue, the court would compare these factors, and the appraiser's report and testimony, with those of an IRS appointed appraiser to arrive at a final decision as to the property's value.

If it is established that the property was overvalued by more than 150 percent, the new penalty rate is a flat 30 percent of the underpayment. (This penalty rate does not apply if the underpayment for all overvaluations for the year is less than $1,000.)

So if you intend to claim a tax deduction for donating any property to charity in 1986, it is not too early to start looking for a qualified appraiser. Regulations for charitable contributions should be followed carefully to avoid turning a tax benefit into a liability.

Screening service will find reliable tradespeople

By The Associated Press

A few years ago, two women ran into similar problems fixing up their separate homes in California's Westlake Village: good, reliable plumbers, carpenters and roofers were hard to find.

Out of their mutual frustrations, the two friends created a company they called the HOMES Guild, Inc., a free community referral service that provides consumers with the names and phone numbers of well-screened, local tradespeople.

Before the company was formed, "we were never quite sure if we were hiring the most trustworthy and reliable workers available," says Christine Graves, a former Florida schoolteacher who founded the guild with Linda Hamm, one-time assistant vice president of marketing at Santa Anita Race Track.

"We thought if we were having trouble, then other consumers were, too."

In the five years since the company was organized, 75 percent of the calls received have been from women. It claims to have given out some 40,000 referrals and now has more than 200 members in 30 major service categories.

HOMES, an acronym from "Helping Others Meet Excellent Service People," has a rigorous screening process for tradespeople and contractors in the Los Angeles area who apply for listing.

Applicants are interviewed by a Guild representative and provide licensing and insurance information as well as a list of customers, some of whom are then sent questionnaires asking for their comments on the tradeperson's performance.

If approved, the applicant pays yearly membership dues and is allowed to use the Guild's "Seal of Approval" in correspondence and advertising.

When consumers call the organization, they are given the names and telephone numbers of members who are able to supply the needed services along with comments from the member's previous customers, according to Miss Graves.

"We encourage feedback, good and bad, from those who use our referral service," she explains. "The majority of calls we receive after a job is completed are very positive.

"The Guild has replaced the yellow pages for many. Instead of taking their chances with unknown names listed in a directory, those who call the Guild can be assured that the referrals we give come highly recommended by other consumers."

To help in getting accurate bids from contractors, the company suggests consumers plan exactly what they want done, how they want it to look and how much they want to spend.

Other suggestions include:

— Ask the contractor for job references.

— Talk to the contractor's customers.

— Look at samples of the contractor's work.

— Make sure the contractor is properly licensed and verify that the license is in good standing.

— Verify identity and business location.

— Request a certificate of worker's compensation insurance coverage if your contractor has one or more employees working on your job.

— Make sure everything you and your contractor have agreed upon is included in the contract.

Millions find ways to own homes

By Lawrence Kilman
Associated Press Writer

Rupert and Gillian Ingram owned a rambling, 90-year-old farmhouse near the Massachusetts coast and loved its spaciousness, its white pine floors and its pervasive smell of woodsmoke and apples.

But their fuel bills were enormous, and upkeep was a headache. When their two girls grew up and moved out, the Ingrams, then in their 50s, decided they needed a house that better suited their needs.

They built their new home at the edge of a salt marsh, and they built it underground. Nestled into a hillside, it has 16 inches of sod on the roof.

But this is no rabbit hole. The rooms, though small, are open and airy, and the south wall is faced in glass. The waving marsh grass stretches for miles, and the majestic view gives the feeling of space the Ingrams craved.

The underground home has another benefit. In their farmhouse, their annual gas bill could reach $1,700. In their earth-sheltered, sun-warmed house near Newbury, Mass., the bill is zero.

What the Ingrams did, moving from the old homestead to a smaller, more easily managed home — is a housing trend of the 1980s as costs increase and the population ages.

But other shifts in American society are changing the American home as well. Only 4 percent of U.S. families now match the traditional nuclear pattern of working father, non-working mother and two kids. Single adults are pooling their resources to buy houses together rather than be confined forever to apartments.

More families have two wage earners, and some of them work at home. Growing numbers of baby boomers, already settled into comfortable surroundings, are now starting families and looking for ways to stretch their space. And with divorces commonplace, single parents are looking for good housing, too.

The 1970s was a good decade for buying a home, but the first half of the 1980s was bad. Sharply rising prices and mortgage rates kept many out of the market, especially young, first-time buyers.

Nevertheless, 64 percent of Americans own their own homes, and that includes millions of young families. In fact, 66 percent of 35- to 39-year-olds and 54 percent of 30- to 34-year-olds are homeowners. How do they do it?

Second incomes are an increasingly important facto in financing home ownership. Smaller homes, unconventional designs, inventive financing and do-it-yourself renovations on older houses are among the ways Americans are making home ownership affordable.

"At least half of those people who are going to be turning age 30 are going to have to find innovative ways to buy houses," said Kenneth Rosen, a real estate analyst and business professor at the University of California at Berkeley.

"They're going to have to have a parent help them, they're going to have to share with someone else, buy a smaller house than they would have otherwise, live in a location they don't want to live in," he said.

An old-fashioned word like prudence also helps in these modern times.

Prudence, as in getting the most for your money. Don Metz, an architect in Lyme, N.H., makes today's compact houses seem larger by eliminating walls between rooms, devoting as little space as possible to hallways and using big windows to bring the outdoors inside.

Prudence, as in demanding energy efficiency. The Ingrams, for example, rely on sunlight and a wood stove to heat their house. They have yet to use their furnace. "Even unsophisticatd buyers are going to ask, 'How much insulation is in the roof?' and they'll want double-pane windows," said Metz.

For many people, making homes affordable means abandoning such middle-class standards as big backyards and formal living and dining rooms, those remnants of the Victorian parlor that are too good for daily family use.

When housing was less expensive, families insisted on living rooms, even though most of their daily activities occurred in family rooms or dens. They wanted dining rooms, but they ate in the kitchen. Such duplication is unaffordable today, and rooms are generally given multiple uses.

High construction costs have also sparked a boom in the home improvement market, because more people are buying old houses and renovating, or they're building additions to homes they own. The home improvement market topped $69 billion in 1984, and more than $38 billion belonged to the do-it-yourself segment.

That segment is growing because of people like Linda Helfet and Bill Hilliker, whose seven-room, 102-year-old house seemed to get smaller as their two children grew. The family joined the carpenters in building an addition. "The boys and I learned so much," said Ms. Helfet. "There were things we would have never begun because we didn't think we could finish it. We learned you can do anything if you just begin."

They bought the house for $38,000 a decade ago. The addition cost $41,000 and gave them a garage, a second bathroom, family room and office work space.

Financial arrangements are also changing. One of the newest ways to finance a house is through a joint ownership agreement, recently made available in all states, where parents buy part of their childrens' house and rent it back to them. The children have smaller monthly payments; the parents get a depreciation tax deduction.

About one-third of first-time home buyers get help from their parents anyway, so the new mortgage has a ready-made market, said Rosen, who developed the program.

Of course, other factors besides money are changing in the American home. The growth of non-traditional families has also spurred new ideas.

When the Minneapolis College of Art and Design announced "A New American House" design competition last year, 346 architects submitted drawings.

"Three ideas defined the competition," said its director, Harvey Sherman. "The dramatic change in households not made up of nuclear families, the high cost of housing, and the growing trend of people working at home."

Microwave ovens are OK

Microwave ovens are generally recognized as useful, convenient kitchen appliances. But for some people, there still remains some concern about the safety of microwave radiation.

When Consumer Reports' engineers tested microwave ovens recently, each model was checked for radiation leakage. The engineers found such leakage to be quite low in all models.

Microwaves, like radio waves and visible light, are a form of electromagnetic radiation. Each form of electromagnetic radiation is identified by its frequency — the number of times the wave oscillates per second. Microwaves oscillate faster than radio or TV signals, but slower than infrared or visible light.

The engineers point out that microwave radiation isn't the same as nuclear radiation — a far more intense type of electromagnetic energy. X-rays and gamma rays oscillate millions of times faster than microwaves and create electrically charged, or "ionized," molecules in the substances they penetrate. Ionizing radiation can harm living cells even at relatively low levels.

Although microwaves don't carry enough energy to be ionizing, they can be dangerous. Consider the heating effect of intense microwave radiation that can cook food or damage human tissue. On the other hand, whether low levels of microwave energy — such as the leakage from an operating microwave oven — might also be hazardous, is subject to question.

Medical literature suggests that the lens of an eye, testicles and a developing fetus could be particularly vulnerable to harm from excessive microwave radiation. But as far as microwave ovens are concerned, research has failed to turn up any convincing evidence of hazard.

Clocks of all kinds help to synchronize our lives

By Better Homes and Gardens

With merry ticks, melodious chimes, insistent alarms, and mute electronic vigilance, clocks rule the day.

Workers punch them, sleepyheads rely on them, trains and planes honor them, and no home is without at least one of them. Whether the style be humble or grand, clocks of all kinds synchronize our lives.

According to Better Homes an Gardens Decorating magazine, it's been that way for quite some time. Prehistoric man studied the shadows on a tree. Ancients measured time by dripping water, by sifting sand, and by fire burning from knot to knot on a rope.

About 3500 B.C., the sundial was developed in the Near East and filled the timely needs of Romans and Greeks. But it wasn't until about 1300 that the clock as we know it, with wheels, dial, and hour hand, was invented by Henry DeVick. Weights were added in the 14th century, springs in the 16th century, and, in 1656, Dutchman Christian Huygens proudly devised the first accurate pendulum clock.

Stumped to improve on clock mechanics, French, German, and Dutch designers focused on style, encasing clocks in replicas of buildings and animals and brushing them with seascapes. Consequently, clocks were once coveted possessions of the rich.

In America, a technological revolution led by Boston clockmakers Simon and Aaron Willard made clocks smaller, suitable for walls and shelves. In 1802, Simon Willard patented the classic banjo clock. By the mid-19th century, American craftsmen had claimed clock making as a homegrown art. In 1880, Seth Thomas introduced a perpetual clock calendar with the monthly minder on a separate weight-driven mechanism.

The Industrial Revolution made clocks de rigueur in every school, depot, office, and home. Twentieth-century electricity and quartz technology fine-tuned the clock's accuracy and diminished its size.

Awed by the perfect functioning of the clock, modern designers, once again, turned to the exterior. Furniture designers and architects, such as Charles Rennie Mackintosh, attempted clock design. Art deco clocks hovered on art with renditions in glass and chrome. In 1934, Gilbert Tohde's plain disc with dots for numerals was in the Museum of Modern Art's "machine art" exhibit.

Collectors now pay handsomely for classic original clocks. For example, a 19th-century antique could go for $100,000. An antique Federal-style bano clock, with brass frets and reverse-painted glass tablets, sold for more than $2,000 a few years ago. The ball clock, designed in 1949 by George Nelson for Howard Miller Clock Co., brings $400 to $500 at auction, said Ron Weaver, vice president of sales for Howard Miller. In the 1950s, the price of a ball clock, which had balls instead of numerals, ranged from $25 to $40.

Among the most popular reproduction clock styles are English mantel clocks, schoolhouse wall clocks, grandfather clocks, and carriage clocks — the boxy clocks with handles first carried by Napoleon's soldiers.

There's a proliferation of clock styles on today's market, from grandfather clocks with quartz movements to humorous theme clocks with knives and forks as hands. No matter what style you fancy, be sure to study any clock's anatomy before buying. First, consider the power source: electric, winding, pendulum, or quartz. You can't sit and forget a key-wound clock; it requires daily or weekly attention.

If it's a vintage clock, make sure it is working or repairable before you buy it. Don't hesitate to have a clock expert look it over before purchase.

Consider where you will place your clock and the clock's readability. There are water-resistant clocks for the bathroom, portable clocks for the patio, shock-resistant clocks for recreation, and jumbo-numeral clocks for the visually impaired. Alarm clocks are multitalented today with snoozer alarms, his-and-her alarms, battery reserves, and ascending-volume alarms. Some "talk," via tiny electronic circuits that produce voice tones.

The more traditional clock voice is the chime, available in a simple gong or a sophisticated sound that gives you a rendition of world-famous chimes.

Tackling do-it-yourself projects

READING — Frank Fernino is in his backyard, dressed in heavy coat and hat, and he's struggling to lift a heavy floorboard onto a half-completed second-story deck. As he works, a voice booms from a speaker like Big Brother gone amok.

"Frank, you don't look like you're suffering enough to me. Can you carry that up from below?"

The voice belongs to Russell Morash, the producer of "This Old House," the Emmy Award-winning home remodeling series that is one of the most popular shows on public television.

Morash is sitting in Fernino's basement, watching a television monitor and giving directions through a loudspeaker nailed to a tree. Outside, in frigid weather, Fernino is helping master carpenter Norm Abram build the deck while Bob Vila, the show's host, and a television crew make him the latest point man in the home renovation revolution.

Fernino, a balding man of 39, is the software manager of a computer company in Boston's suburban high-tech corridor. His wife, Mary Jane, is a substitute English teacher at the local high school. They have a 7½-year-old daughter named Betsy and are active in the PTA.

The Ferninos have an impressive woodworking shop in their home. They've used it to build an office, finish the basement, split a formal dining room off their kitchen and add a wood stove and insulation to their porch. Contractors helped put the pool in the backyard.

Now the one-story ranch house they bought in 1974 for $36,000 is too small. A two-story colonial nearby would suit them, but it costs $250,000. So the Ferninos decided to add a second floor to their home, a job that involved taking off the roof and adding three bedrooms, two bathrooms and a deck upstairs.

The renovation will cost about $50,000.

"When you think of the initial $36,000, even when you spend $50,000 it's a lot better than selling and going somewhere else," Mrs. Fernino said. "We have a half acre and an inground pool. We like our neighborhood, and we have a lot of work in this house."

Herb Abramson

Local man to be on Easter Seal telethon

NEWTON — It is only natural that Herb Abramson was invited to serve as a V.I.P. for the Massachusetts Easter Seal Society Telethon, March 8 and 9 on Channel 25. In 1951 he worked with some Cerebral Palsy parents and founded the United Cerebral Palsy Foundation of Boston.

In 1956, with the help of Norman Knight, then General Manager of Channel 7, WRKO in Boston, and Rocky Marciano and Jimmy Durante, the New England Neprosis Foundation was formed, which later became the National Kidney Foudnation. Abramson served as president for seven years and was involved in raising the first money for the dialysis machine.

They developed a program called the ACE Award, in which the automotive industry cooperates in hiring the handicapped.

A graduate of Boston University, he developed the first Alumni-Student Recruitment program, now used throughout the world.

Abramson, a long-time Newton resident and philanthropist, got an early start in business, owning his own auto dealership before 30 years of age. In 1966, Silver Lake Dodge won the Benjamin Franklin Quality Dealer Award given by the Saturday Evening Post. This was the first time a small dealer had ever won this award. At a dinner held in his honor, attended by more than 2,000 people, all proceeds went to the Kidney Foundation.

Abramson and his wife Harriet reside in Newton. Their son, Warren, is Silver Lake Dodge Leasing manager and daughter Diane is at Boston University. This year Abramson and his wife will chair the Benjamin Franklin Time Quality Award dinner in New Orleans.

He will appear on the Easter Seal Telethon from 7 to 8 p.m. on Sunday, March 9, WXNE-Channel 25, Boston.

Division 3 North boys' basketball

Newton Catholic advances

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — Neither the Newton Catholic Lancers nor the Georgetown Royals knew what to expect in Saturday night's Division 3 North Sectional basketball quarterfinal. As Georgetown head coach Al Haddad put it, the two teams entered the contest as "unknown entities" to each other.

Nevertheless, Newton, coming in as the fifth seed with a 16-2 record, didn't seem to be intimidated by the Royals (13th seed, 9-9) and their star guard, Steve Kavanaugh, who averages 22 points a game.

In fact, the Lancers held Kavanaugh to only 11 points, as Newton out-shot Georgetown, 61-51, in a game that had more traveling violations than policemen have tickets for.

The win puts the Lancers into the semifinal game against Matignon Thursday night at Reading High School (7 p.m.).

Leading the way for the Lancers were forward Jeff Sherman and guard Frank Battista, who poured in 22 and 17 points respectively. That, along with a solid defense, was enough to dispose of the high-flying Royals, who had upset fourth-seeded Lynn Technical.

"Our interior people did a nice job defensively," Newton coach Don Dabenigno said, referring to Sherman (nine rebounds), Mark Pulsifer and Kurt Kiessling. "They rebounded well, sticking the body."

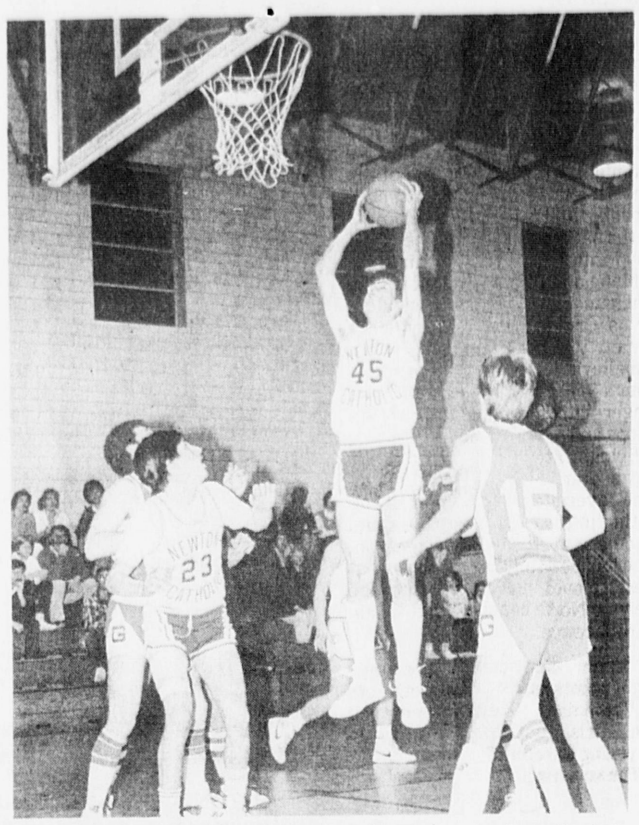

To their credit, the Royals stayed relatively close to a highly explosive Lancer team. Newton led at all the stops, but a seven-point halftime margin (30-23) was dwindled to four (44-40) by the end of the third quarter.

"I was very proud of the way my kids played," Haddad said. "My big kid (Kavanaugh) just didn't have a big night. He busted his tail out there, but the ball just wouldn't go in."

Kavanaugh, who was the co-player of the year in the Cape Ann League (Division 2), shot only four-for-19 from the field, and was called for traveling twice late in the fourth quarter, thanks to a stingy Newton defense that had him well-covered throughout the game.

Offensively, the Lancers looked sharp. With less than a minute left in the first quarter, they promptly expanded a three-point lead into a seven-point bulge. Sherman rebounded a Georgetown shot, tossed the ball out to Battista, who returned it back to Sherman in stride for the layup.

Then, like a flash of lightning, Kevin Walsh came out of nowhere to steal a Georgetown pass and lay it up for two more.

But the second quarter blues hit the home team right away, as the Royals went on a six-point run that cut the deficit to one (20-19). Center Art Pierce (15 points) finished off the stint, netting two from the charity stripe.

Then, after the two clubs traded baskets, Georgetown took the lead for the first time since it led, 8-2. Pierce was perfect from the line again, and the Royals were on top, 23-22.

That was the last lead the Royals would have, as Newton went on an eight-point run with Battista, Sherman and Walsh doing the honors.

First, Battista hit a 15-foot pull-up pop that gave the Lancers the lead (24-23) it would never surrender. Then, in between a couple of Georgetown misses, each one of the threesome hit a pair of free throws to set the score at 30-23 at intermission.

The Lancers jumped out to their biggest lead early in the third period (34-26) when Walsh took it himself on a nice drive that left the Royal "D" a bit confused.

Timeout Georgetown.

After the pause, the Royals got their act together, spinning off the next six points, but Battista came back with a jumper from the top of the key to make it 36-32.

Then, with 2:50 showing, Battista hit again, this time from the paint, and the Lancers had a six-point lead (40-34). They led, 44-40, after three.

And they put it away in the fourth.

With Newton leading, 51-44, Kiessling stole the ball from Kavanaugh, but was called for traveling.

No matter. Kavanaugh returned the favor, taking steps before going up to the basket.

The Royals finally ran out of gas after cutting the lead to three (51-48) with just over two minutes left. Sherman countered with a reverse layup to make it a five-point margin.

That lead would increase to seven (58-51) before Sherman tallied with a crowd-pleasing layup at the buzzer. He was fouled on the play, and made the shot for good measure.

In the tournament opener, first-game jitters were really first game jitters for Newton Catholic.

The Lancers opened tournament play with a totally green playoff team, this being the first time in 16 years Newton Catholic has qualified for the state tourney, and that inexperiece showed early.

Luckily for Dabenigno, the butterflies left early, and Newton Catholic was on the way to a 66-55 first-round victory over Greater Lowell at Pope John High School.

Sherman rescued the Lancers in the second quarter, pumping home 12 of his 27 points in that frame, to boost his team to a 28-17 halftime edge.

The Lancers had led by just three, 10-7, after a poor first quarter in which Sherman missed on his first seven shots from the floor and Newton Catholic as a team missed several opportunities to open it up.

"The shots were there in the first quarter, they just weren't falling," Dabenigno said. "In the second quarter we started to play with more confidence."

A man-to-man defense by Greater Lowell came as some surprise to Dabenigno, who had suspected that Sherman might draw special attention.

"They (Greater Lowell) played us man-to-man and they thought they could keep up with him us," the coach said. "We really expected a box or a tight zone with special attention, but they went to a lot of pressure."

With the 11 point edge at the half, Dabenigno was not satisfied. His defense was shaky, and the coach said he felt that "with a couple of breaks here and there, Greater Lowell could have made it a seast-squirmer."

The Lancers bolstered their lead to 15 in the third quarter but, as the coach feared, Greater Lowell cut it to nine.

"Every time we pumped the score up they got it right back down," Dabenigno said. "We were not paying attention and we had lots of turnovers."

It wasn't until Sherman, Battista, and Walsh hit seven-for-eight collectively from the foul line during crunch time that Dabenigno felt safe.

John Canning played an outstanding second half for Newton Catholic, scoring two clutch fouls shots in the dying minutes and junior Greg Giesleni also played a strong game.

New Bedford ousts Lion boys

By Mike Stoller
Sports Correspondent

NEW BEDFORD — Not even Roadrunner and Coyote could have run faster than the two teams that squared off in the Division I South Sectional basketball quarterfinal Friday night at New Bedford High School.

Newton South and New Bedford played a run-and-gun game for the entire 32 minutes, but for the Lions, it was their last gallop in what can only be called a very satisfying season.

The highly-favored Whalers (19-1) stormed their way to a stunning 91-75 victory behind the tremendous shooting of star senior forward Roger Lewis, who popped in 33 points and had 16 rebounds. Lewis averages 23 points a game and is only the second player in the school's history to score more than 1,000 career points.

Newton came out with the intent to dethrone the fourth-ranked team in New England. The Lions jumped out to a 10-2 advantage (their biggest lead) in about the time it takes Wilma and Betty to go on a shopping spree.

Senior guard Pillan Thirumalaisamy, who led all South scorers with 23 points, pumped in the first four of the game in less than a minute, and after the Whalers put their first two on the board, South went on a six-point run that looked as though it might set the tone of the game. The Lions were quick, finishing off the stint with a nice feed from Jim Mercer to Randy Collins (13 points, five assists).

But as South mentor Joe Killilea summed up, "We were quick, but they were quicker."

No argument there. South enjoyed success for much of the first quarter, but with 4:30 remaining, the Whalers started a 15-6 run that ended with Steve Wynn (24 points) hitting a jumper and giving New Bedford a one point lead, 17-16, at the end of one.

Remember, Lewis, with only two points, hadn't even made his presence felt yet.

But he would with six seconds left in the half, nailing a jumper from downtown to give the Whalers a 43-37 lead at the break.

Just minutes earlier, the Lions had tied the game at 35 on a nifty exchange that saw Newton run the break as well as the Los Angeles Lakers.

Reggie Stewart blocked a Whaler shot inside, and the ball went out to Thirumalaisamy who fed it cross-court to Collins. Collins returned it back to Thirumalaisamy, who finished it off with a layup.

Then, in the third quarter, South started to fall, and Lewis began to strike. That combination spelled doom for the Lions.

In the opening round, Weymouth South had Mr. Smooth, but Newton South had the market cornered in the Mr. Pressure and Mr. Clutch departments.

The Lions rallied under the gun in Weymouth to force overtime, then dealt the hosts a mouthful of blue-collar offense to take a thrilling 74-67 first-round victory.

The blue-collar Lions have lived and died by intensity, winning five games during the regular season by two points, and against Weymouth South, that intensity lived.

Newton South battled from as much as five points back with just under three minutes to play in regulation, tying the score with just two seconds showing on a dramatic Thirumalaisamy hoop off an offensive rebound. The tide had begun to change.

When Rohan Henry sent Gary Grossman (16 points on seven-of-nine shooting) in for a go-ahead hoop right off the opening tap in overtime, Newton South had completly switched the momentum.

Stewart (21 points) then put the Lions up by four, 68-64, with a midcourt steal and a breakaway hoop with 1:07 left to sink the Wildcats, and Collins (19 points) would clinch it with four straight free throws.

Both teams had played run-and-gun offense for four quarters while defense took a back seat, but in overtime, Newton South excelled on defense. Weymouth South could not buy a hoop in the extra session, thanks largely in part to the quickness of guards Thirumalaisamy and Collins.

Collins, who played the final minutes of regulation and all of the overtime period with four fouls hanging over his head, had a pair of big rebounds that led to his charity points.

Weymouth South had opened the game with a quick 10-2 lead, compliments of three hoops by Alan 'Mr. Smooth' Jones and two by Chris Horn, but Newton took the lead with a 10-point scoring spree capped by a pair of free throws from Collins.

The junior guard had back-to-back steals to both tie the score and to give Newton South its initial lead. Collins picked off a midcourt pass and dished off to Stewart, who hit on an outside jumper to tie the score, 10-all, then three seconds later he stole the ball on the Weymouth inbounds pass, resulting in his foul shots.

Two straight hoops by Wildcat John Cawley put Weymouth South right back in the lead, but Grossman tied it, 14-14, with 39 seconds remaining. Horn answered for Weymouth with a turnaround jumper from the key, but Collins dropped home a cute jumper with one second left to knot the score after one, 16-16.

The teams were just as close in the second quarter, going through four lead changes and five ties before Weymouth South pulled away to a five-point advantage.

The summaries:

NEW BEDFORD(91)-Lewis 12-9-33, Wynn 10-4-24, Bedard 8-3-19, Lessa 3-3-9, Magnett 2-0-4, Sylvia 1-0-2. Tot. 36-19-91.

NEWTON SOUTH(75)-Thirmulaisamy 10-3-23, Grossman 4-6-14, Henry 5-1-11, Collins 5-3-13, Stewart 3-2-8, Loughlin 1-0-2, Vayle 1-0-2. Tot. 30-15-73.

Upset string ends for South girls

NORTH ATTLEBORO — In her final game for Newton South, Katrina Antonellis gave everything she had, leading all scorers, but it wasn't enough to beat number one seed North Attleboro, which defeated the visiting Lions, 65-46, to remain undefeated at 22-0.

The Red Rocketeers put together a textbook example of team play in knocking the Lions from the Division II South Sectional playoffs. Juniors Steph Cooper and Alyssa Gutauskas each poured in 18 and senior captain Marcy Falcone added 11 to lead the balanced Attleboro attack. Senior Sue Farnell was the "one" in the Red Rocketeers' box-and-one defense that limited Newton South all-time scoring leader and Dual County League scoring champ Antonellis to 19 points.

North Attleboro dominated the first quarter, taking 19 shots, but was unable to get the ball to go in the hoop, shooting a disastrous 21 percent from the field. At the end of one, the score was 12-10 in favor of the Red Rocketeers.

The second quarter saw North Attleboro pick up its shooting to the tune of 50 percent (7-of-14) from the field, and a perfect 3-for-3 from the line, building a 29-20 halftime advantage.

Antonellis kept the game close with all 10 of the Lions' second-quarter points, but the box-and-one wore her down considerably. The entire Newton squad showed signs of fatigue in the second half, as North Attleboro opened up an 11-point lead after three. The Lions never gave up, hanging tough for the entire contest, but the Red Rocketeers were just too much.

The Lions got to play North Attleboro by taking a 43-42 win over Duxbury in the quarterfinals.

"When I go to the line, I think about going to California and being in Sheila E.'s band," said Williams before going to the line and hitting two clutch free throws to make the difference.

Following a dismal third quarter that saw both teams combine to score 14 points, the Lions battled back behind a pair of jumpshots by Antonellis and Wilson to tie the game at 33 early in the fourth.

The forward-guard duo excelled throughout the contest, providing more than half of the team's total offense. "Katrina was unbelievable," lauded Aronson. "She had a typical All-Scholastic performance."

Wilson was also a key in the victory, according to the Newton South coach. More important than her seven points was her press-breaking ability. Before the game, Aronson noted that throughout their 17-3 South Shore Large Division-winning season, the Duxbury Green Dragons had relied strongly upon their press.

In the fourth quarter, South spread out its offense as Duxbury concentrated on shutting down Antonellis while the Green Dragons went almost exclusively to Co-Captain Hannan.

With 53 seconds left in the game, Aronson called for a timeout. Junior guard Jennifer Lerman canned a 20-foot jumper (her only shot of the game) to give Newton a 41-40 lead. Duxbury failed to convert and with 22 seconds remaining, Antonellis forced a jump ball and South retained possession.

Although Antonellis' 21 points, nine rebounds and three assists do not qualify her for one of his elusive triple doubles, she unloaded a three-quarter court baseball pass ala Larry Bird to Williams, who spun away from one defender and was sent to the line by Hannan with 15 seconds showing. California (and Sheila E.) dreaming, she made both shots from the charity stripe and sealed a Newton victory. Williams finished with 10 rebounds and 11 points.

Hannan's basket with 10 seconds to go, followed by a Lion five-second violation, gave South a scare. An even bigger scare was provided when, with no time remaining, Antonellis was hit with a personal foul, sending Olsen to the line for two. Olsen missed both shots, and Newton South was on to the semifinals.

In the preliminaries, Newton South sank its teeth into the host Sandwich Blue Knights, and on the strength of a Jen Roser set shot with three seconds to spare, the Lions upset their hosts, 41-40.

Down-to-the-wire is what it's all about when the tourney rolls around, and the South Lions proved that a little pressure can't keep them away come crunch time.

Division 1 girls' basketball tournament

Ventura puts Tigers in semis

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

NEWTON — For the second straight time in tournament action, Newton North's girl cagers rolled out the welcome mat, acted as hospitable hosts for a short time, then pulled the rug out from under the visitors' feet.

The host Tigers put a poor first half behind them Saturday afternoon and showed visiting Falmouth what they were really made of. Behind a career-best, 31-point performance from Carol Ventura, Newton North sent the Clippers back to the Cape with a resounding 60-38 playoff pounding.

Trailing, 15-10 after one quarter and 25-21 at the half, Newton North coach Irene Cucina reassembled her troops and, for the second time in a week, proved that a stern between-halves lecture never hurt anyone. No one, that is, but the opposition.

"I went into the locker room and told them what they were doing wrong," Cucina said after the game. "I yelled at them a bit and that gets them mad."

Tuesday against Bridgewater-Raynham, the struggling Tigers came out of their halftime meeting and shut out the stunned Trojans in the third quarter to ice a decisive first-round victory. Saturday against Falmouth, it was much the same story.

Newton North ran off the first eight points of the third period to take a 29-25 lead with 5:22 left in the quarter. Ventura, who had singlehandedly kept the Tigers alive in the first half, hit an inside hoop to open the third, then canned a pair of free throws to tie it, 25-25.

Next, the senior forward dished off a neat pass to Carolyn Natale to give Newton North its first lead of the game, 27-25. Ventura then assisted on a Robin Silver layup with 5:22 to play in the third and, with a 29-25 advantage, the Tigers would never look back.

"We panicked," said Falmouth Coach Al Holcomb. "Newton North has a good team. We had played so well in the first half, but they (Newton North) held together and played better in the second half."

Cucina had watched in horror during the first session as her second-ranked Tigers were getting beat in every department by seventh-seeded Falmouth.

"We should have been up by 15 points at halftime," Cucina said. "And that's not counting the missed one-and-ones."

Newton North never led in the opening half and trailed by as much as nine, the direct result of turnovers, missed field goals, and a horrible showing from the free-throw line.

The Tigers missed 15 free throws in the first half, a sin for a team that shoots 60 of them apiece each day in practice. Newton North, a 54-percent shooting team from the floor, also hit on just 27 percent of its attempts from the field in the opening half.

All that changed in the second half, and the good luck that Holcomb and his Clippers were experiencing in the opening 16 minutes also changed.

"If you saw the first half and then watched the second half, you saw that it wasn't the same game," Holcomb testified.

Whereas North couldn't buy a hoop in the first two periods, Falmouth now could not put the ball in the net. The Clippers were rattled, and when Holcomb mistakenly sent six players out on the court following an early third-quarter timeout, the Tigers smelled blood.

Leading by four with 2:53 left in the third, Ventura (13 rebounds, five assists) and Ann Meng combined to run off seven straight Newton North points to bury the Clippers.

Meng scored from inside to put the Tigers up by six, 37-31, then threaded the needle with an inside assist on a Ventura hoop for a 39-31 Newton lead with 1:46 left in the third.

Twenty-seven seconds later, Ventura canned the front end of her one-and-one, and after missing her second attempt, corralled the rebound and put it for a deuce and an 11-point lead, 42-31 with 1:17 left.

Falmouth's Johnna Vinding cut the lead to single figures with a baseline shot, but a Wendy Rogers ("she's awesome" — Cucina) rocket from downtown pierced the hoop at the buzzer to put Newton North back up by 11, 44-33, after three.

The fourth quarter was showtime as Ventura and Rogers combined for all 16 of the Tiger points with some impressive passing and ball handling.

In their first round game, the Tigers experienced both extremes against Bridgewater-Raynham, and there was no need to ask which one they enjoyed most.

After falling behind 10-0 and trailing at the end of the first quarter, 12-7, the Tigers stuck it into overdrive and outscored Bridgewater, 44-12, the rest of the way to take a one-sided 51-24 first-round victory at home.

Bridgewater-Raynham caught an off-guard Newton North squad by surprise and ran off 10 straight points before the Tigers knew what had hit them. An aggressive pressure defense by the Bridgewater Trojans caused 12 Newton turnovers in the opening frame and held the hosts without a basket for the first four and a half minutes.

"They surprised us," admitted Cucina after the game. "We knew they were fast and aggressive and we knew they could press, but they executed better than we had anticipated."

North closed the quarter with a 7-1 scoring run, then gave Bridgewater a real taste of its own medicine. The Tigers outscored the Trojans, 14-2, in the second quarter behind six points by Meng, then shut out Bridgewater-Raynham in the third period, 20-0, to put the contest out of reach.

"That's the first time we've ever done that," Cucina said of the third-quarter whitewashing. "Defense is my game, so it feels great."

Defense was Bridgewater's game in the early going. The visitors had been scouted as a strong defensive team, but the 11-7 underdogs were looking unbeatable.

When Meng finally hit from the baseline with 3:27 left in the opening period, the Tigers got just the jumpstart they needed. Newton North had the look of good things to come in the second quarter, scoring the first eight points to take its first lead.

A Rogers free throw with 5:04 to go in the half put the Tigers up, 13-12, and Ventura followed with a pair of charity tosses to give North a three point edge.

Bridgewater's Sue Quinn hit a jumper with 3:12 left in the half to close the Newton lead to one, 15-14, before the Tigers scored the final six points of the quarter to head into the locker room with a 21-14 halftime lead.

"I was happy at the half to be down by just seven," said Bridgewater-Raynham Coach Gerry Cunniff. "I think we surprised them early but once they started pressuring us we fell apart."

The worst was yet to come for Cunniff and his troops, who got a real look at an unbeatable defense in the third quarter. Newton North had switched from its man-to-man and dropped into a zone in the second quarter, but the real effects of North's wide-out defense didn't sink in until the third frame.

"Our man-to-man defense was Swiss cheese," Cucina said. "When we switched to a zone they couldn't score."

Newton North could. The Tigers scored 10 baskets, three each by Ventura and Rogers, for 20 points to sink the visitors after three, 41-14.

The home team got the score as high as 51-16 before garbage time, when Bridgewater scored the last eight points in the game to account for the 51-24 final.

Ventura, the Suburban League's leading scorer, had an off night with only nine points. The senior forward did not score a basket and had just three points at the half before scoring her first hoop with 2:55 left in the third.

Meng and Rogers picked up the slack though. Both girls sizzled, or as Cucina said, "They were everywhere. It was unbelievable." Meng scored 14 points on seven baskets and Rogers dipped home 13 with six hoops and a free throw.

Bridgewater was without its top scorer, Marlisa Mangelson, who averaged eight points an outing in the Old Colony League. Cucina said she knew Mangelson, who had been touring colleges out west, would not play, but the Newton North coach said it made no difference.

"Their big scorer averages eight points, our's (Ventura) gets 21," she said. "I didn't even tell the girls, but we didn't do anything different."

Tiger girls fifth in Class A track meet

BOSTON — Newton North fared quite well in the girls' Class A Track Meet at Harvard University recently. The Tigers accumulated 17 points for fifth place, one spot ahead of Waltham (which tied with Lowell) with 14.

The Suburban League once again proved its strength in girls' track, taking four of the top seven spots. In addition, North Quincy was second in Division 2.

The 1000 was a strong event overall for the Tigers, as North grabbed the third and fifth spots.

Tara Feeney turned in a 2:51.4, her personal best. Abby Siegel's 2:54.1 was good enough for fifth, also a personal best.

The Class meet featured yet another brilliant mile duel between Cambridge Rindge and Latin's Frances Jarvis and North's Magda Kornitzer. Earlier, in a dual meet, Jarvis won by two seconds. In last week's league meet, the difference was cut in half. The gap narrowed still further in the Class meet, but again Jarvis came out on top.

Jarvis finished with a 5:05.1, with Kornitzer, only a sophomore, only six-tenths of a second behind in a PR.

Newton North also grabbed sixth in the relay with a 4:19.1. Lydia Dyett, Kornitzer, Feeney and Joanna Giddon comprised that quartet. Cambridge won that event in 4:08.1.

Newton South

In Class B, Newton South picked up eight points on Dede Theodore's second-place finish in the shot. Her throw of 34-9½, wasn't her best, but she was consistent, topping the 34-foot mark all three throws. The junior was beaten out by North Attleboro's Wendy Johnson, who threw a 44-8¾ to far outdistance the field.

Natick's Dempsey beats North

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

BOSTON — Sometimes one player can make the difference. Friday night Mike Dempsey was that player as Natick nipped Newton North, 3-2, in overtime in the opening round of the Division 1 South hockey tournament at Northeastern's Matthews Arena.

It's not just that Dempsey scored the gamewinner at 3:21 of OT, though that certainly can't be minimized. It's what he did the entire game: things like figuring in all three goals, playing both center and defense, centering two different lines during the third period and coming off the ice only twice in that frame and not at all during the extra stanza.

"Dempsey's done it all year for us," said Redman coach Bill Lacouture. "We were doubling him up in the third period and overtime. We wanted the best we had out there."

Despite all that playing time, Dempsey had the extra step when he needed it at the end. The coach's son, Dave Lacouture, fed him a pass at the Newton blue line. Dempsey turned on the jets, splitting the defense for a clear chance on goalie Chuck Goldman.

Dempsey is not a superstar scorer, with 11 goals all season, but he has an extremely quick release and puts his shots on net. That was good enough on Friday, as he wristed one low into the far corner to end the game and put Natick into the quarterfinals against Silver Lake.

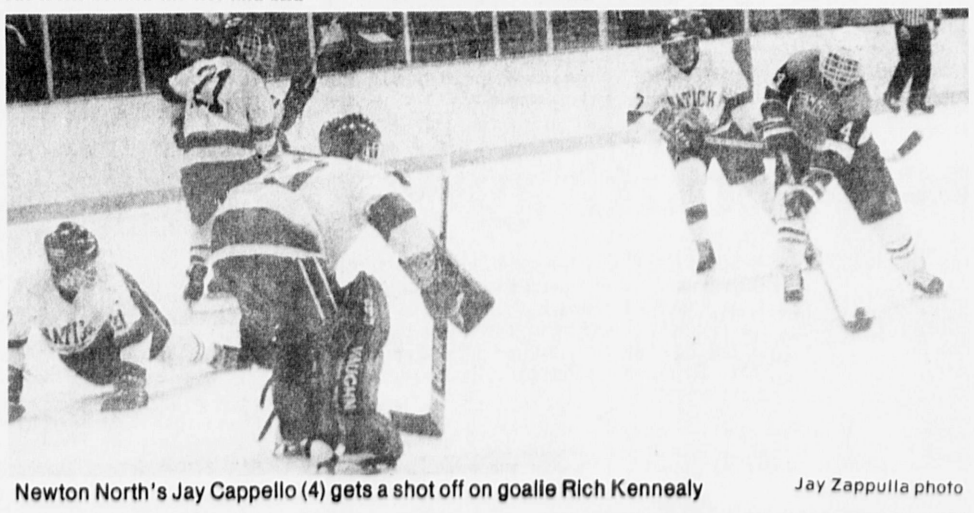

Natick came into the game as a heavy favorite, based on a 13-0-5 record and a Bay State League championship. When the Redmen scored 15 seconds into the game, it seemed the predictions of Newton's demise might be proved correct.

What's worse, it was a somewhat freaky goal. Dempsey didn't get all of a shot from the right point and it slid through a crowd toward the net. Somewhere along the line, Sean Finnegan must have touched it, because he got credit for the goal, which trickled past Goldman on the glove side.

Natick's second goal was no thing of beauty either, but the Redmen simply wore down the Newton defense with a long possession in the Tiger end. Dempsey finally took the puck out from behind the net and slid one in the short side. Goldman got a stick on it as he was trying to recover, but it caromed off and went in.

A penalty call and Rick DeSimone changed that in a very short period of time. Bill Lacouture (junior) was whistled for a tripping call at 11:55, giving the North power-play unit a chance to go to work.

After a beautiful series of passes in the Natick end, DeSimone took a final feed from Dave O'Connor and blasted a high shot over goalie Rich Kennealy's shoulder. That goal, more than anything else, convinced the Tigers that they could win this one.

New image for the potato

Broccoli-Cheddar Potatoes ... for lunch or dinner. File photo

The once lowly and fattening potato has been rejuvenated in the American diet as of late thanks in part to an aggresive advertising campaign by the Potato Board (Yes there is a potato board).

The most remarkable achievment of this this tubular promotional board is that the ever diet conscious public realizes that the potato itself is not guilty of causing bulge. The spud's caloric content is relatively low ... about 110 calories per medium spud. The fattening culprit is the butter and sour cream many eaters slather on the potato.

The spud's status has risen so high that February is actually Potato Lover's Month. Considering how many pounds per year are used in this cook's kitchen a spud salute is certainly in order. Each American eats over 120 lbs. of potatoes per year according to stats but personally that figure seems low as as 10-lb bags disappear from my kitchen every fortnight.

Of course many Irish cooks already know the beauty of the potato as it an integral part of the Erin heritage. This area may never have been so dominated by Irish immigrants were it not for the Irish dependence on the potato in the 1800s which eventually lead to the famine.

Potatoes can be enjoyed at all three meals but it also can be savored as a snack. Recipes are endless from thirty-two versions of potato salad and hash browns to specialty recipes like tarragon cream potatoes.

From frying to baking to sauteeing to steaming the spud takes on all aspects of cooking and deliciously so. Nothing is as divine as a plain baked potato with the aforementioned butter and sour cream that but method is not the end of the spud's use.

Try baking the potato then shelling it. Mash the innards with butter, sour cream, sauteed onions and chives and restuff the spud. Reheat. A delightfully different baked potato. A properly stuffed spud can be lunch on its own or even a first course.

Don't think that you have to go out to enjoy potato skins as a snack. As is the case with most tasty dishes, the made-at-home variety is even better than most eatery offering.

Bake potatoes as usual. Shell most of the spud out, reserving the innards for hash browns. Melt butter and coat skin with butter. Bake for five minutes. Meanwhile prepare a cheese sauce, fry some bacon and chop some scallions. Dish some crumpled bacon and scallions into each skin and slather the cheese sauce over the skins. Add a dollop of sour cream and some of the best tasting potato skins you'd ever want to eat are ready for consumption.

With this year's crop estimate at 40 billion pounds, there's certainly no shortage of the spud. And although grown in all fifty states, it's nice to support the regional leader, Maine. That 40 billion pounds is an all time high up over 9 percent from the tops in 1978.

Potatoes should be stored in a cool and humid place that's well ventilated. At 45 to 50 F they keep for several weeks but warmer temperatures encourage sprouting and shriveling. Exposure to light causes a green tinge to sprout which can cause a bitter flavor. But the greenness can be easily peeled away. Never refrigerate potatoes as the chill causes a sickly, sweet taste.

Acapulco Frittata

8 eggs
1 1/2 cups large curd cottage cheese
1/2 cup grated Monterey Jack cheese
1 4-ounce can chopped green chiles, drained
1 4-ounce can sliced black olives, drained
3 medium potatoes (about 1 pound)
1 onion, finely chopped
Salt and pepper
2 tablespoons minced fresh parsley

Preheat oven to 350 degrees. Beat eggs until well blended, then stir in cheeses, chiles and olives. Peel potatoes and shred coarsely. Add potatoes and onion to eggs along with salt, pepper and parsley. Pour egg mixture into buttered 9x13-inch baking dish. Bake uncovered for 35 to 40 minutes or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Cool for about 10 minutes before cutting into squares to serve. Top will Chili Tomato Sauce before serving. Serves six.

Chili Tomato Sauce

2 tablespoons oil
1 onion, minced
2 cups tomato puree
1 clove garlic, minced
2 to 3 tablespoons chili powder
1/2 teaspoon cumin
1/4 teaspoon oregano
Salt

Heat oil and cook onion until limp. Add tomato puree and garlic. Add chili powder, cumin, oregano and salt and stir until well blended. Cover and simmer for 30 minutes stirring frequently.

Cream Potatoes

3 medium potatoes (about 1 pound)
3/4 cup half and half or milk
2 tablespoons fresh chopped tarragon or 2 teaspoons dried
Salt and pepper
1/4 cup chopped walnuts
1 tablespoons butter

Peel and grate potatoes. Place them in skillet with half and half, tarragon, salt and pepper to taste. Cover and simmer for five minutes. Remove cover and cook over medium heat until potatoes are tender and have absorbed liquid, about another five minutes. While potatoes are cooking, saute walnuts in butter until crisp and brown. Serve potatoes topped with sprinkling of chopped sauteed walnuts. Makes six servings.

Broccoli-Cheddar Potatoes

4 medium baking potatoes (1 1/2 to 2 pounds)
Margarine or butter
Dairy sour cream
1 cup small broccoli flowerets, cooked until crisp-tender and drained
4 or 5 medium mushrooms, sliced
1/4 cup imitation bacon bits

Prick potatoes with fork to allow steam to escape. Bake potatoes in 400-degree oven unitl tender, about 45 to 60 minutes. Cut one potato lengthwise into halves; place halves, cut sides up and touching each other, on ungreased cookie sheet. Repeat with remaining potatoes. Make several slits in surfaces of potatoes with knife. Spread with margarine, top with sour cream. Treating two halves as one, top each potato with broccoli, mushrooms, cheese and imitation bacon bits. Bake until cheese is melted and vegetables are hot, eight to 10 minutes. Serves four.

Potatoes Tarragon

3 large Idaho potatoes
1/4 cup butter or margarine
1/4 cup flour
1 1/4 cups chicken broth
1/2 cup dry white wine
1 tablespoon cider vinegar
1/2 teaspoon dried leaf tarragon, crumbled
1/2 teaspoon dry mustard
1/2 teaspoon salt
2 medium tomatoes, cubed

Pare potatoes; cut int halves crosswise. Place potatoes in large saucepan with one-inch boiling, salted water. Cover. Reduce heat, simmer 25 minutes until tender. Meanwhile, in small saucepan, melt butter; stir in flour, cook one minute. Gradually add broth, wine, vinegar, tarragon, mustard and salt; stir until mixture boils and thickens. Cook two minutes longer. Drain potatoes; cut in ¼-inch slices. Place half the potatoes in a shallow, two-quart baking dish; sprinkle with tomatoes.

Pour half the tarragon sauce over the vegetables. Arrange remaining potato slices in baking dish; top with remaining sauce. Bake in a 350-degree oven 25 minutes, until sauce in hot and bubbly. Recipe makes four to six servings.

One of Marlene's recipes caught my fancy — as it may yours. That's because part of it is a copycat version of a commercial product — Irish Cream Liqueur.

Irish cream mousse

2 cups Irish Cream Liqueur, see recipe
1 envelope unflavored gelatin
1/4 cup cold water
3 large eggs, separated and at room temperature
1/4 cup sugar
1 cup plus 6 tablespoons whipping cream

Lightly oil a 5- to 6-cup decorative mold. Stir gelatin into cold water; set aside to soften, 5 minutes.

Whisk egg yolks in top of double boiler off heat until blended. Whisk in 1 cup Irish Cream Liqueur. Place over simmering water and cook, stirring constantly, with a wooden spoon until mixture feels hot to the touch and is thick enough to leave a pattern when you run your finger along the wooden spoon, about 8 to 10 minutes. Do not boil. Remove from heat and immediately add softened gelatin, stirring until dissolved. Transfer mixture to medium-size bowl and place in larger bowl of ice water. Stir occasionally until mixture thickens to consistency of mayonnaise and begins to set. Remove from ice water.

Meanwhile beat egg whites in large mixing bowl with electric mixer on low speed until foamy. Gradually beat in sugar, 1 tablespoon at a time, until stiff but moist peaks form. Gently spoon whites over top of liqueur mixture; do not mix. Beat 1 cup of the whipping cream in the empty bowl with electric mixer on low speed until thickened. Beat on medium speed until soft peaks form; do not beat stiff. Fold whites and liqueur mixture into whipped cream until blended. Pour into mold. Cover with plastic wrap and refrigerate until set.

To make sauce stir together 1 cup Irish Cream Liqueur and 6 tablespoons whipping cream. Mousse and sauce may be refrigerated, covered, overnight. Before serving, run knife around edges of mousse and dip mold briefly in warm water. Unmold onto serving plate, slice and top with sauce. Serves 6 to 8.

Irish cream liqueur

3/4 Irish whiskey
14-ounce can sweetened condensed milk
2 tablespoons chocolate syrup
2 tablespoons instant coffee dissolved in 1 tablespoon boiling water
3 large eggs

Place Irish whiskey, condensed milk, chocolate syrup, tablespoons instant coffee dissolved in water, and eggs in blender and mix until smooth.

Refrigerate overnight. Use 2 cups as directed in Irish Cream Mousse recipe and use remaining, chilled as you like. Stir well before using. Makes 3 cups.

A loved pig is an profitable pig

By Cynthia Benjamin

FAIRFIELD, Iowa (AP) — It doesn't take much to make Doug Johnson's pigs feel relaxed and loved — just a computer voice saying in a Swedish accent: "I think I'd swoon if you allowed me to kiss your limpid umbrella."

The coquettish computer came to Johnson's farm Tuesday to spend an hour talking to his pigs as a one-time experimet.

"If a happy hog is a healthy hog then, in theory, he should gain faster, and that's dollars to me," Johnson said, explaining why he agreed to the experiment set up by Fairfield Software.

The software company brought its "Babble 123" program right to the pigpen and then turned the gentle, male voice loose to coo sweet nonsense at the pigs.

"My mind and heart are always crowded by visions of your coy elbows," the voice said to the 55-pound, 13- to 14-week-old crossbred pigs.

"The blood rushes to my head when we play bridge at your mother's every Friday night," it continued.

"I like to fondle your sleeveless fur coat," it said.

The pink and grey pigs reacted by scampering around their pen, playfully chewing on reporters' coats and camera tripods, and eating as usual.

"I find this absolutely amazing," said Nelda Palmer, a sociologist who was on a panel of "hog specialists" charged with gauging the pigs' reaction.

"There's large numbers of people here and an obvious intrusion into their territory but you don't hear those high-pitched, squealing sounds. Instead you see them coming up to us, being playful... Therefore it is possible, we must admit, that the sound many have had a calming effect," she said.

"Of course, we can't draw a scientific conclusion from this," she added.

The other panelists also were impressed with the tranquility the 100 pigs displayed as platoons of reporters, photographers and camera operators invaded their pen to record the great event.

"They're enjoying it," said farmer and auctioneer Dan Webb. "The pigs aren't afraid of us at all — normally, with all the strangers around they would run."

Dave Reiff, a feed dealer, said he believes the pigs "were definitely going through an emotional episode of some type." Asked what that experience might be like, Reiff replied, "Who knows? Who knows the things that love causes?"

Johnson, who raises pigs to market weight on his 1,200-acre farm, also was impressed with the calming influence of the voice.

"I think it's a success," he said. "The pigs have been very congenial and cooperative with the press. A few of them even gave personal interviews."

But Johnson said he wasn't about to rush out and outfit the pigpen with a sophisticated computer system.

"Seriously, if I was going to do this on a wholesale basis, I would buy a $15 radio instead of a $4,000 computer," he said.

In fact, Johnson, like most farmers, does play a radio for his livestock.

"But this was a good cause," he said. "One of the real reasons I got involved in this is there's so much doom and gloom in agriculture today, I thought this would be a different approach, something that would put a smile on people's faces."

Vt. town meeting attendance decreasing

HANCOCK, Vt. (AP) — Inside the white town meeting hall on Route 100 was what photographers call a "Norman Rockwell" — a classic portrait of democracy in action.

But missing in the picture during Tuesday's town meeting were many of the townspeople. Of Hancock's 171 registered voters, just 47 people attended their town meeting.

"A little better attendance would help us," Robert Deering, a selectman, said during lunch. "But for a small town like this one, I think it's the best system."

Selectman Chair Paul Norton, celebrating his 54th birthday with banana creme pie with his neighbors, agreed. "The interested people show up. There's just fewer of them," he said. "A few will sit back and chew their tongues, but most people here have their say."

Secretary of State James Douglas is worried about the health of Vermont's town meeting largely because of low voter turnout. Last year, the traditional town meeting attracted only 14 percent of those on checklists.

"It's discouraging because it's an opportunity to have a direct impact on decisions that affect their lives," Douglas said.

Eight Vermont cities no longer hold town meetings, but the other 238 communities do, according to Douglas. About 50 Vermont towns have moved their meetings to Monday night in an effort to attract more voters, and hold Austrailian ballot on Tuesday.

Douglas said town meetings work best in small towns such as Hancock. "The smaller the town, the better the attendance, and the more vibrant and vital the town meeting," he said.

Chief disputes zoning complaints

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Building Inspector Robert Columbus expects to release soon the results of his investigation into a home owned by Newton Chief of Police William F. Quinn that allegedly violates zoning laws and the state's building code.

But one charge — that Quinn's 1900 Washington Street building may not have enough second-and third-story stairways — appears unfounded, Columbus said.

The state's building code requires at least two egresses per dwelling in case of a fire emergency.

The home satisfies that requirement through internal stairways, he said, "It meets today's code," Columbus said.

Building Commissioner James W. Cameron must first examine the results of his investigation before they can be revealed, Columbus said.

He inspected the 1900 Washington Street building last week after Shirley Jaffe in a Feb. 24 letter told Mayor Theodore D. Mann that Quinn's building may have too many dwellings and not enough fire egresses.

Jaffe, who has asked the city to investigate more than 235 ap-

Learning life through dance

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

WEST NEWTON — Deep in the bowels of the Newton Community Service Center, the pitter-patter of little feet echoes off the stone walls and mixes with the melody of fairytale music. Scurrying around the studio floor like little mice, a group of five-year-olds learns the fundamentals of ballet under the tutelage of former professional dancer Joanne Langione.

"Okay now class, pretend you are a flower about to bloom," the Newton native tells the pupils who line up in front of her. Not yet Mikhail Baryshnikov or Isadora Duncan, the youngsters must first learn the basics of movement and motor coordination.

It has been nine years since the 32-year-old mother of two decided to raise a family and live a "normal" life, backing off a little from the hectic world of professional dance. As founder and artistic director for Dance Center, however, Joanne Langione, who used to dance with the Boston Ballet and the Alvin Ailey company in New York, is still heavily involved in the art she loves so much.

> 'Later on in life, if they ever have any kind of problems at any age, dancing is a great way to work off tension.' Joanne Langione

"It takes energy, energy, energy to work with these kids," she says in her cramped office that along with the adjoining studio has served as home to Dance Center since it moved from the Pomeroy House four years ago.

While Langione and six other professional dancers, all certified instructors, teach all levels of ballet, jazz, tap and aerobics, it is the "babies", as she calls them, who require the most patience.

"It is absolutely wonderful working with them," she says of her young charges, in some

DA confirms complaint

School Comm. violated open meeting law

By Kevin C. Kennedy, News Editor

NEWTON — District Attorney Scott Harshbarger has confirmed a League of Women Voters'(LWV) complaint that the School Committee has made "a continuing practice" of violating the Open Meeting Law (OML).

In an October letter to the DA's office, Newton LWV President Anne Hayden complained that the School Committee failed to record adequately and report what took place behind closed doors, in executive sessions. "It is our understanding that the Newton School Committee's minutes of closed sessions are simply a listing of general topics, which may or may not be complete," Hayden stated. "The committee has never released any of the minutes of closed sessions, so it is impossible to ascertain if this is always the practice."

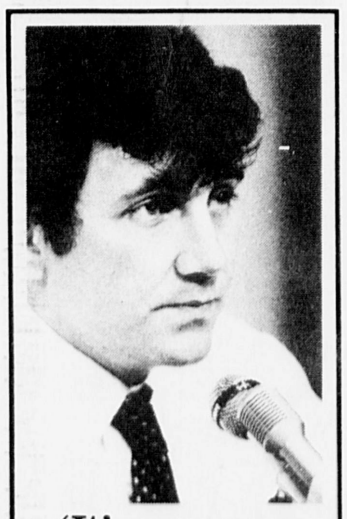

The committee's alleged oversight was discovered, according to Hayden, when a Newton LWV member researching the open meeting law for the state LWV discovered "no record of a closed discussion held in February 1982 on an open meeting law complaint."

Hayden stated she is concerned that "when records are not properly kept, accountability is difficult to ascertain and there is no historical understanding or continuity either for the public or for current and future members of the governmental body."

Harshbarger went even further than Hayden indicated in her complaint, stating in late February, "Based on the information the office has obtained, I conclude that the executive session minutes maintained by the committee do not comply with the requirements of the Open Meeting Law ... in several respects.

"Our investigation has also revealed the following additional violations of the OML: some executive sessions appear to have been held for improper purposes; the committee's open session minutes are deficient insofar as they pertain to the convening of executive sessions; and executive session minutes are being

Teachers' raises criticized, defended

Teachers pact unrelated

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile says the latest teacher's contract has "nothing to do with" negotiations between the city and police and firefighters.

"It is a convenient excuse to say that the contract awarded to the teachers has had a negative impact on the current impasse in negotiations between the city and police and firefighters for a new wage and benefits package," he says.

Last week, Mayor Theodore Mann said the teacher's contract had a negative effect on the negotiations. In December, police rank and file rejected an offer hammered out by the city and representatives of the Newton Police Association (NPA). "One of the reasons we're confronted with the problem is what the teachers have done," Mann said.

Mann said the city cannot afford to offer police and firefighters what the teachers were awarded because the School Committee used state education grants as part of the funding. Gentile, however, says "the police would have turned down the city's offer no matter what happened with the teacher's contract."

Raises created impasse

By Les Orsini, Staff Writer

NEWTON — The School Committee's inclusion of one-time state money in the latest teacher contract was a poor business decision that has helped stymie the city's police and fire negotiations, according to Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

"No responsible administrator would ever give a forever raise ... based on a one-time increase," Mann said. Of the stalled police and firefighter negotiations, he commented, "One of the reasons we're confronted with the problem is what the teacher (raises) have done."

Settled in December, the teacher's contract gave pay hikes of 7 percent in 1986 and 1987 that included state money from the education reform bill.

That money consists of two one-time state payments - $650 per each full-time teacher in 1986 and $450 per each full-time teacher in 1987.

Unless the state decides to renew those funds, the city will have to pay for the commonwealth's portion of the raises in 1988.

Water—sewer charges will skyrocket in next 5 years

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Aldermanic outrage over the possibility of a greater increase than expected in state charges has delayed action on setting the city's sewer and water rates.

According to the latest estimate from Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer, the average family will pay $1,000 annually for sewer-water services by 1991. Figures released by the city last month showed a family of five in Newton paid around $240 for the same services last year.

Last month, the aldermanic Public Facilities Committee approved a 52 percent sewer-water rate hike for the next 2 1/2 years.

The Finance Committee Monday night was prepared to act on the proposed increase, which eventually must be settled by the full Board of Aldermen.

But the committee decided not to vote after learning the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) was considering hiking its sewer-water charges to communities an average of 74.8 percent.

Committee members said they want to meet with authority officials to discuss the issue and express their opposition to the proposed increases before voting on Newton's sewer-water rates.

Richard Kelliher, the city's chief administrative officer, said he would attempt to arrange a meeting with a member of the MWRA's board of directors.

The proposed 74.8 percent increase - recommended by the MWRA's staff - is more than twice what was originally an-

Dog biscuits to 'down under'

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

NEWTON CENTRE — For almost two days, Lotte Lent of Newton had to eat dog biscuits and turnips and skin rabbits in order to survive. Camping out in the rain, without a tent, Lent had to navigate her way to safety by using a compass.

But following the 36-hour ordeal — which took place in the wilds of Hartford, Conn. — Lent, 22, received her acceptance papers. As a result, she will spend May through July in the Australian outback studying the Aborigines, working on scientific projects and participating in community service activities.

Lent was chosen for the work by Operation Raleigh, a Peace Corps-type program based locally in North Carolina but initiated by Prince Charles of Wales. The purpose of the program is to foster leadership skills and understanding of cultural differences in young people.

Lent says only half of a group of 30 were chosen for the expedition following one of several rigorous "selection weekends." Like Outward Bound, an outdoor survival program, the weekend was set up to test the physical stamina and character of program applicants.

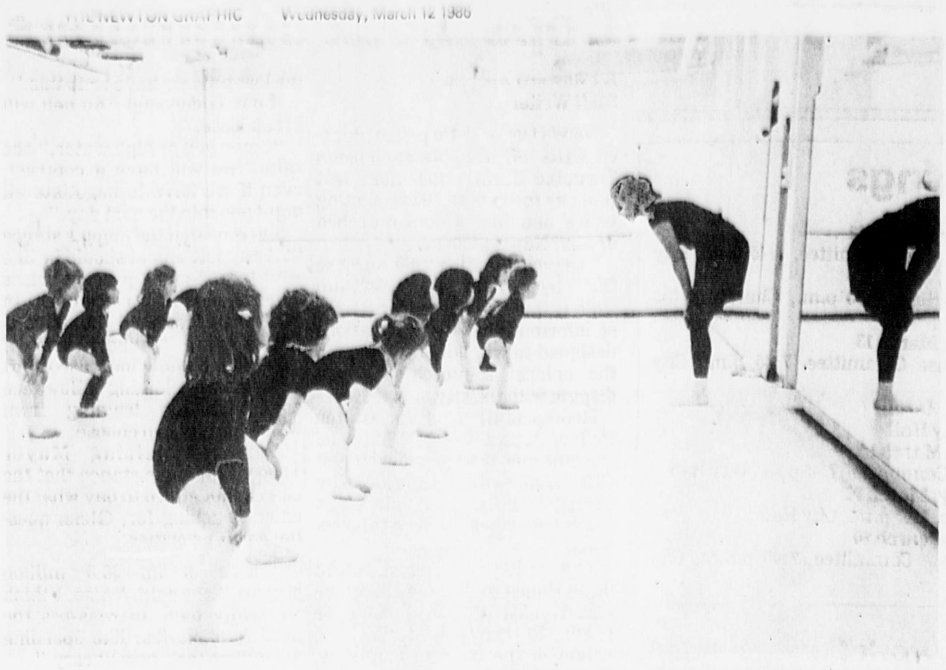

> 'I'll be working in Australia with Aborigines. Hopefully, they'll take us hunting and we'll do funky things like that.' Lotte Lent

The first morning's breakfast included two turnips, a package of Kool-Aid and a lemon, all thrown together in a garbage bag.

"And that was for six of us," Lent exclaims. "We had to eat it. We did. It wasn't that bad."

For lunch, the group ate dog biscuits. And, "That night we had to skin a rabbit," she says.

cases as young as three-and-a-half. "I love children and care about them as people. Instead of just having them dance, I teach them life through dance."

The important thing about working with the children, she says, is "getting them to trust me.

"I like to develop a rapport with them," she says. "I want them to trust me because dance is a spiritual and psychological thing as well as a physical thing. Later on in life, if they ever have any kind of problems at any age, dancing is a great way to work off tension."

While the program culminates with an annual recital, which this year will take place May 17 and 18 at Aquinas College, Langione is quick to point out that her school is not a professional troupe or dance factory.

"When the babies come in here," she says of her Creative Movement classes, "one of the first things we try to do is get them in tune with their bodies. We want them to be able to skip and later learn to move their arms in coordination with their legs. We do not put pressure on them like a professional company, which requires perfect dancers."

The curriculum she and her staff use is designed to educate the students about movement, introduce them to dance and make them feel comfortable with exercise and conditioning.

Even if some students appear to have advanced skills, Langione does not cast a spotlight on them. She says she does not want to make anyone feel bad and besides, "I've seen little chubbies turn into beautiful little Sylphes" as they grow older.

Some students do find success. Shawn Mahoney, a former Dance Center student, is now performing with the American Ballet Troupe. But, by and large, Langione says her real success is seeing her students' faces light up as they perform for their parents and friends.

"A lot of these kids are scared and say they can't do it," she says. "But, once they put on the tutu, the ruffles and the lipstick and see themselves in the mirror, they realize that they are beautiful ballerinas. They understand what it is they worked so hard for and will be more determined to work hard in the future."

In a world where only one out of every 1,000 dancers actually makes a living plying his or her trade, it is helping to provide that little ray of hope that Langione says is the driving force behind Dance Center.

Official opinions vary widely on early dismissal question

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

'I always thought support services were supposed to accommodate the school system, not dictate to them.'

Lynn Sullivan

NEWTON — The School Committee remains undecided about whether early dismissals should continue at the elementary school, and it appears the final vote, expected April 14, will not be unanimous.

For the first time since discussion began in the fall, the School Committee Monday night voiced its tentative position on the sensitive item that has pitted parents against teachers.

"It's an issue I've been long interested in, and none of the arguments have convinced me that there is enough instructional time at the elementary level," School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile said. "The time is here, and the time for a change is now."

Superintendent Dr. John Strand recommends maintaining the Tuesday and Thursday 1 p.m. dismissal to continue providing teachers time for professional development and curriculum enrichment.

"The arguments in this area tend to say that the only way we can provide professional development is to continue with the early dismissal schedule," Gentile said. "Our budget is filled with means to provide staff development, and I think our commitment is quite obvious. I think direct service to our students should take precedence over other arguments of staff development and morale."

Gentile recommends the extension of at least one of the early dismissal days until 3 p.m., translating into 90 additional instructional minutes per week.

Member Sally Rizzo also favors changing the school schedule, mostly to help relieve the socio-economic pressures the early dismissals place on single parents and two-career families.

"Although it's important to separate education from day care needs, I think we're falling short of recognizing the profound changes our society is facing," Rizzo said. "We must take a leadership role to provide day care and after-school activities. Until the city can come up with another arrangement, I feel, somehow, there needs to be a change in our schedule."

Committee members Robert Ricles, Jennifer Huntington and Gerald Bazer said they support Strand's recommendation, citing a direct correlation between professional development and quality education.

"Our schedule makes us leaders, rather than followers of other school systems, even if it means we're different," Ricles said. "I think our differences are some of the things that make us better. By maintaining professional development on these days, we are, in turn, providing better educational services for the kids."

Huntington said the school's function should not be confused with the role of day care providers.

"I'm sorry, but this is not the sole responsibility of the schools, although it is an issue our society must address," Huntington said.

The overriding concern of the committee should be the betterment of student's education, she added.

"What counts the most is the quality of instruction time, and not the number of minutes our children spend in school," Huntington said.

Lynn Sullivan, on the other hand, would like the school day to start 15 minutes earlier, rather than infringing upon teachers' professional time after school. This schedule change would account for an additional 75 minutes per week.

"I think this can be worked out. I'm not convinced by the bus schedule argument that this alternative would cost us $250,000," Sullivan said. "I always thought support services were supposed to accommodate the school system, not dictate to them."

Two committee members, Angela Nielsen and Sydra Schnipper, said they are undecided.

ticipated. The authority's Board of directors will weigh seven rate hike options at its March 19 meeting.

The options range from a low of 28.9 percent to a high of 136 percent, according to Cirillo.

Under the 74.8 percent proposed hike, Newton's MWRA sewer-water assessments would rise from $2.4 million in this fiscal year to $4.1 million next year, according to figures provided by Cirillo.

Created last year to clean up Boston harbor and improve regional sewer and water services, the MWRA wants to increase its next budget by 25 percent.

Among many projects, the authority is preparing to build a $2 billion waste-treatment plant at Deer Island.

To finance this and other plans, the authority is raising its charges for sewer-water services to its 51 member communities. They, in turn, must hike their own sewer-water rates.

Finance Committee Chairman Paul Coletti and aldermen Richard Bullwinkle and Elaine Gentile said the MWRA's 51 member communities should battle the authority's proposed hikes.

Bullwinkle and Gentile argued that since the entire state would benefit from the cleanup of Boston harbor, every Massachusetts community should share in the cost.

"Just don't dump this on the communities that happen to stuck in the MWRA," said Bullwinkle.

"People won't be able to afford to drink," said Bullwinkle.

Coletti said officials from the authority's member communities should pressure Gov. Michael S. Dukakis and state legislators to have the commonwealth absorb some of the impact.

"The election time is near," Coletti said. "I would say we would be in a position to vote out any legislator."

In part, the authority is considering higher charges because it has assumed a $36 million debt from the Massachusetts District Commission, which was responsible for area sewer-water services until the MWRA was formed.

Some aldermen said the state should pay that debt, not MWRA communities.

Only Alderman Wendell Bauckman seemed willing to accept higher MWRA charges. The cleanup of Boston Harbor is an environmental issue that cannot be avoided, he said.

Suit filed against Green's housing plan

NEWTON —An attorney for two Garden City residents says he wants developer Alan Green's special permit and site plan approval for a 251-unit housing complex on Farlow Hill to be "annulled."

"The Board of Aldermen, in granting (Green) the special permit, acted arbitrarily and capriciously and made a mistake," Sheldon Drucker, who has filed suit in Middlesex Superior Court on behalf of Newton residents Frederick Dorr and Natalie Friend, says. "Number one, they failed to consider the negative report submitted by the Land Use Committee, which recommended denying the petition. They also failed to heed the Newton Planning Department's recommendation that the petition be denied."

Drucker says both Land Use and Planning denied the petition because Green's 251 units would result in "increased density in a residential neighborhood, and cause drainage and traffic problems."

"We believe the project the Green Company proposed is much too intense for the neighborhood," he says. "The board made a big mistake and we are going to win."

Drucker says the technicality he will be using to make his case is wording in the Green petition board order.

"The Land Use Committee, on Jan. 28, 1986, voted 4-3 to deny the petition," he says. "In the board order dated Feb 3, 1986, the special permit and site plan approval were granted in accordance with recommendations of the Land Use Committee. Since the committee recommended denial, we feel we have a strong case."

City Clerk Edward English, who filed the order, points out that the board voted to substitute approval for denial of the committee report, a routine procedure for approving items on the floor that a committee recommends denial of.

"That claim has no legal force or effect," English says. "The language in the board order is only boiler plate language and has no effect on the outcome of any suit."

Dorr, who lives at 282 Kenrick St., is a direct abutter of the proposed development. He says he wants the city to protect the single-family residential quality of the neighborhood.

"The road is coming right out on Kenrick Street," he says of the proposed access route. "This area is zoned for single family. Why should it be zoned for apartments when it is zoned now for single families?"

Dorr says he wants to see the Green petition "thrown out in court."

"If they want to build single-family homes, that's fine," he says. "I realize that, the way it is, the property is a mess, but the owners could clean it up and keep security gaurds up their to make sure there is no vandalism."

Nahanton St. bridge work finally funded

OAK HILL — Plans to rehabilitate the much-travelled Nahanton/Kendrick Street bridge can go forward now that the Board of Aldermen has approved spending $34,000 for design work.

Needham and Newton are sharing the costs for designing the improvements for the bridge that spans the Charles River and joins the two communities.

The Newton board approved the expenditure last week.

The state is expected to pay the actual construction costs, which Newton City Engineer Paul Giunta estimates at between $250,000 and $300,000.

The project will cover repaving of the bridge surface and close a gaping hole that has been covered by a metal plate.

The hole and cracked deck could pose a safety threat to drivers if the heavily trafficked bridge is not repaired soon, Giunta has said.

The two communities are sharing design costs because the bridge, built in 1959, was deeded jointly to Newton and Needham.

Construction could be completed by late autumn but would have to resume again in the spring if work was not finished by that time, Giunta has said.

The two communities could join again on another bridge repair project, Giunta has said. The bridge joining Elliot Street in Newton to Central Avenue in Needham has a wooden sidewalk and rail that should be replaced, according to Giunta.

High winds affect Iodice's new building

NEWTONVILLE — No one was injured and no serious damage was reported when powerful wind gusts toppled a small section of scaffolding at a construction site on Crafts Street last Friday.

The incident occurred before workers arrived at the scene of Michael Iodice's nearly completed six-story office building near the intersection of Crafts and Washington streets.

The winds, which began after midnight Friday and lasted throughout most of the day, also tripped numerous commercial and residential security alarms in the Garden City.

Authorities in Waltham and Watertown reported no major problems caused by the gusts and said they did not notice any unusual increase in the number of false security alarms during the overnight period.

The strong, yet sporadic winds proved a major inconvenience for pedestrians when sand left on the streets from snow removal efforts was whipped into their eyes.

Some of the lighter pieces of rubbish left on the curb for collection during the overnight period Friday also ended up strewn in area streets and yards.

Forestry crew in local communities had to contend with scattered reports of broken tree limbs and branches, some of which had already been weakened by Hurricane Gloria.

Mail carrier admits to drug charges

CAMBRIDGE — A 36-year-old Boston man who worked as a U.S. Postal carrier in Newton has pleaded guilty to drug charges for which he received a suspended two-year term at the Billerica House of Correction.

Judge Robert Banks imposed the sentence in Middlesex Superior Court in the case of Frederick Hinkley of 110 Knoll St.

Hinkley admitted to selling less than two grams of cocaine on July 26 and Aug. 9, 1985 to undercover postal inspectors and to violating state narcotics laws with co-defendant John Consodine, a 33-year-old postal inspector who lives in Hyde Park.

Consodine is scheduled for trial on similar charges on April 28.

According to Assistant Middlesex District Attorney Adrienne Lynch, both mail carriers have been suspended from the postal service pending the outcome of the case.

Lynch said Hinkley and Consodine sold cocaine to inspectors while on their regular postal beats in Newton.

Metal detector installed in courthouse

WEST NEWTON — In an attempt to prevent incidents of violence, the courthouses in Middlesex County will soon have metal detectors installed at the entrances to prevent people from bringing weapons inside.

Newton and Waltham district courts already have equipment installed, but they are not fully operational yet, Middlesex Superintendent of Buildings Charles Rinaldo said.

"We don't have enough people to man the front entrances yet," Rinaldo said. "We will have full-time, trained security guards to man the detectors by September. This measure is an effort to anticipate problems before they happen."

Rinaldo said the county has been planning to install metal detectors for five years. Although there have not been many violent incidents in the county's courts, there have been numerous bomb threats.

"We continually get violent threats, and we're hoping this will deter people from carrying through with these threats," Rinaldo said. "The appearance of a uniform at the entrance will also settle people down."

The metal detectors have been recently delivered to the courts, but most are not turned on or installed in the proper place yet. Rinaldo said it will be a long process because all other entrances to the court houses will have to be locked to force people to go through the main entrance where the equipment will be.

"We have to comply with all the various building codes and meet with all the judges before this becomes really official," Rinaldo said.

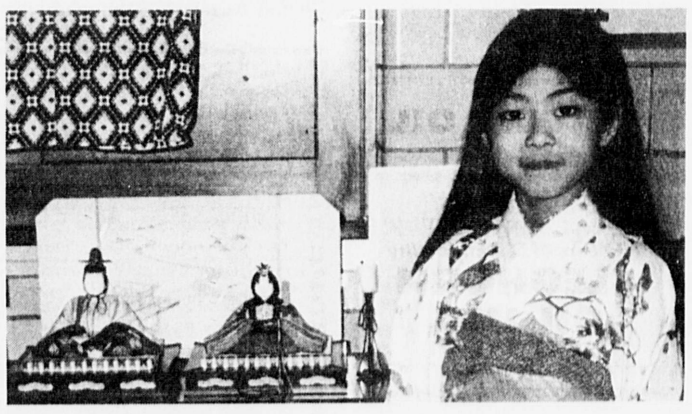

More and more people are carrying guns and knives, according to Rinaldo, but if they expect to go inside the courthouses, they will have to turn their weapons over to security until they leave the building.

Cops block commuters

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — State police blocked exits off the Massachusetts Turnpike during rush hour last week as more than 100 protesting police and firefighters marched around Newton Corner.

The picket, called "the worst so far" by Police Chief William Quinn, was the latest in a series of informational demonstrations designed to win public support in the unions' 20-month-old wage dispute with the city.

Representatives of the Newton Police Association (NPA) and the city met the next morning at City Hall with mediator Tim Bornstein in another vain effort to get both sides to agree to a contract.

The rush hour protest forced State Police to close the turnpike exit 17 east and westbound for about 10 minutes during the height of the evening commute, causing a back-up of more than a mile. In addition, traffic going through Newton Corner was brought to a virtual standstill, where it took some cummuters almost 20 minutes to make it from the eastbound exit around Gateway Center to Washington St.

"This is bad," he said, "very bad."

NPA President Lynda Glenn, however, said the demonstration was successful.

"I think we are getting our point across," she said. "I think we are showing the people of this city that we are totally frustrated with the situation. I hope this is the last time we have to do this."

If not, Glenn said "All hell will break loose."

"Come hell or high water," she said, "we will have a contract, even if we have to negotiate all night and into the next day."

She repeated the union's stance that any settlement should be line with the 7,7 and 6 percent raises given teachers in December. In addition, Glenn said the union is asking for a "laundry list" of benefits including increased shift differential, clothing allowance and on-the-job training from which the city can choose.

Again criticizing Mayor Theodore Mann's stance that the city cannot afford to pay what the union is asking for, Glenn questioned his priorities.

"There is an $8.6 million surplus," she said. "Also, I think we really have to reassess the need for luxuries, like spending $15 million for a new library."

While Glenn said she would do "as much as possible to reach a settlement today," she expressed doubts that it could happen without binding arbitration.

"I don't know where we go if this falls through," she said. "Even though there will be a mediator, it does not mean that they have to agree with his findings."

NPA member said they will dig in for a long fight if the negotiations fall through.

"If we don't get what we want," 11-year veteran James Egan said, "we will tie up every intersection in the city at the same time. We have the manpower to do it and we will, because we want to embarass the mayor. If he has to go to the governor for help, he will be embarassed."

'Sticker parking:' a waste of time

You can throw the recently approved "sticker parking" ordinance on the trash heap, along with the infamous "pooper-scooper" ordinance, the "anti-noise" ordinance and a number of other unimplementable and unenforceable laws approved by Newton's Board of Aldermen.

We will never know to what better purpose the hours spent debating, modifying, clarifying, advocating and resisting this ordinance could have been devoted. The current impasse with public safety workers might have been resolved. Horrendous increases in the cost of dumping our waste, which lurk on the immediate horizon might have been averted. We might have found out how many angels would fit on the board president's gavel.

As things are, though, we now have a mongrel of a new parking law, the offspring of many fathers, which made headlines while it was being debated and will never be heard of again.

Check that. Residents of Chestnut Hill, abutters of the Boston College campus who are sick to death of having BC sports fans trashing the lawns of their quarter-million-dollar homes will be lining up at City Hall for parking stickers. As well they should. After all, this new, citywide parking ordinance was custom-tailored for them.

They have become so exasperated over the years, as BC has continued to escalate its sports program, that they will probably wend their way through the labyrinth of legalese that characterizes the new ordinance.

They will garner the necessary signatures from their neighbors, one from each of 50 percent of the households in the area they want restricted. They will rally their forces for the mandatory public hearing on restricting parking in their neighborhood.

They will lean on their aldermen to make sure their plan is expeditiously ushered through the appropriate municipal agencies. They will tap their feet waiting for officials from the Department of Public Works, who already have a few duties commanding their attention, to "undertake a survey and review of traffic and parking conditions in the area of the proposed restriction."

They will drum their fingers on their desktops while the aldermen refer their petition to the city's Traffic Commission for further "review" and "recommendation."

When they finally have won official approval for their petition, they will wait in line to pay $5 per year, per vehicle for their stickers. Remember, their records will be checked, and they will be forced to pay up all their old parking tickets, with fines, before they can procure a parking sticker.

They will affix their hard-fought stickers to their vehicles with care, knowing that one mistake will mean the sticker "shall be deemed to be of no effect."

They will hoard their two visitors permits with the care usually reserved for family heirlooms, knowing that, once they are lost, they will never be replaced.

Then, excepting days during which BC is hosting large crowds and a large police "presence" is required, they will sit in their homes and watch the same people who have been parking on their streets for years continue their obnoxious, illegal behavior without missing a beat.

They will watch the police, who do not care to get out of their warm patrol cars on cold nights to read the fine print on parking stickers affixed to windows covered by snow and ice, drive by illegally parked vehicles without stopping, maybe without slowing down. They will become incensed.

Meanwhile, another tree in northern Maine has been cut down to be turned into paper for aldermanic effusions. It was a fine, handsome tree, located between two stumps. One was created by the unenforceable noise ordinance. The other by the infamous "pooper-scooper" law.

Newton's 'Capt. Kirk' could spell 'relief' for Democrats

By Donald M. Rothberg

When Newton's Paul G. Kirk Jr. took over as chairman of the Democratic Party, he had what many considered an impossible dream: to get party activists to kick their rules habit.

He argued that it was time for the Democrats to stop rewriting their rules every four years and "get on with the business of the day, winning elections."

Despite a lot of skepticism, Kirk succeeded. The Democrats met for three days recently and approved what the chairman called "minor modifications" in the rules governing the contest for the party's 1988 presidential nomination.

When it was over, Kirk was pleased. He told a news conference the Democrats, at long last, looked like "a party that has its act together."

Well, he almost succeeded. The Democratic rules junkies were unable to totally kick their habit.

While Kirk was convincing members of the Democratic National Committee that major changes in delegate selection rules were a bad idea, Southerners continued to push for their regional primary, which is their way of saying that changing the rules of the game might change the results.

The Democrats have lost four of the last five presidential elections and, except when Georgian Jimmy Carter won in 1976, the once solidly Democratic South has voted reliably for Republican presidential candidates.

The Southerners are arguing that those wild liberals in Iowa and New Hampshire have been forcing the party to accept presidential candidates too far to the left. They hope that as many as 11 Southern states will hold primaries or caucuses on March 8.

No matter that Iowa and New Hampshire gave Carter his big boost in 1976, or that Democrats in those two states are no more or less liberal than their Southern counterparts.

The fact is the Southerners, like Democrats everywhere, are unhappy with the party's record in presidential elections. So, the answer must be to change the rules.

Robert Slagle, chairman of the Texas Democratic Party, is fond of summing up the frustration of the region's Democrats by saying, "When you've been bit four or five times by the same dog, it's time to get a new dog."

Slagle conceded the new dog also may bite, but added, "It can't get any worse and it just might get better."

At this point, the Southern primary seems to make everybody happy.

"I'm not worried about it," said Kirk.

George Bruno, New Hampshire Democratic chairman, is happy because he is convinced the Southern primary will make his contest even more important, a theory that is seconded by many political operatives, including Tom Donilon, who was a top strategist for Walter F. Mondale in 1984.

"Nothing can compete in terms of strategic importance with Iowa and New Hampshire," said Donilon. He said if the Southern states wanted to truly influence the process they'd be better off spreading primaries through three different dates in March which, he said, would "have March be the Southern month."

Kirk could take comfort from the fact that this year's DNC meeting was less fratricidal than many of the party's meetings have been in the past. Battles over party rules often have been bitter and divisive.

Another difference was that this year President Reagan was having problems with his party instead of causing them for the Democrats.

Early in Reagan's presidency, the Democrats were forced to sit helplessly and wring their hands over the support the president was getting from Southern Democrats on key budget and tax votes.

This year, by contrast, the Democrats arrived in town in time to watch the Republican-controlled Senate Budget Committee dump the president's budget proposal, with six of the 12 GOP senators voting against Reagan.

For many in the opposition party, votes like that are how you spell political relief.

Coping with a crisis in rising health costs

It is ironic that third party insurance, which proved such a boon for community hospitals, has now become a kind of noose strangling the institutions into fiscal crisis.

Accelerating charges for the protection provided by prepayment plans induced the extensive cost containment plans imposed on the hospitals by state and federal regulation, sharply reducing bed patient count and drastically diminishing the amount of revenue available to underwrite operations.

Thus, modern health centers built with millions of dollars of government subsidy supplemented by the high volume of guaranteed patient bills, along with local philanthropy, are under utilized. Cash flow isn't matching outgo. Drastic retrenchment has had to be made.

Reductions in force being made by local hospitals are made no less painful by the fact that they are not unique. The same is taking place in other areas of the commonwealth. Long service staff people, devoted to nursing and other duties, face the trauma that comes when a lifetime's specialization is suddenly snatched away.

They join a long list of patients' families caught in the web of bureaucratic decision making. State and medical authorities saw the way to harnessing health care costs by arbitrary judgments on minimal time limits for specific inpatient hospital stay. One-day release on surgery, two or three days in other situations, even prompt discharge of terminal patients when there was a reluctant belief on the medical side nothing more could be done in a procedural way ... such has been the cost containment picture formulated by government and the health insurers.

Health maintenance organizations came into being within the past several years to pull down costs. Physicians banded together in prepayment consortiums to offer modest charge office visits as well as treatment. Clinics and educational programs were pushed. The idea was to keep clients with health problems out of the hospitals to the fullest possible extent. The objective is fine, without a doubt, but the consequence has been a drop in the patient census in the hospitals.

On the health insurance side, the more sophisticated technology and the shift of physician care to greater specialization have meant ever higher charges, with accompanying premium increases. Malpractice suits with large jury awards have added to cost pressures on fees, all part of the crisis situation that has developed.

Those in the health field have a responsibility to put the varied elements together to come up with solutions. A primary objective should be to achieve fuller utilization of the community hospital. We strongly believe the policy on inpatient care is too stringent. Ways to reconcile this limitation policy with the bottom line, hopefully, can be found. If there were administrative excesses in the past, which may not be arguable, the corrective action is taking place under current pressure.

We shouldn't be letting our community hospitals become monuments to vanished dreams of better health care.

Letters

Breaks for taxpayers before workers' raises

To the editor:

After we sent our previous letter discussing the pay raise situation for city employees, we were asked just what percentage raise we would consider.

Before answering that question, we would like to state, emphatically, that we do favor appropriate raises for city employees. We certainly do not wish to do anything to prevent any raise that is deserved. We still say that city reserve funds, a long time overdue real estate tax cut, and the more urgent capital requirements have priority. Tax cuts also help employees.

Within that context, assuming that those priorities are preserved, I would consider supporting some percentage pay raise figure that is between the mayor's present offer and the employees' request.

In the unhappy event that we cannot presently manage a pay raise without depriving the above-mentioned priorities, the raise would then be still affordable if additional state funds could be obtained for that purpose or if departmental sufficient savings could be arranged.

A break for the Newton real estate taxpayer is longer overdue than any pay raise, and we should have a real estate tax reduction of at least 6 percent in '86.

Marriott's goals are same as Auburndale's

To the Editor:

The Newton Marriott Hotel has appeared before the Land Use Committee of the Board of Alderman to construct a lecture room for business classes in what is presently an unused area of the hotel.

The construction of this room is absolutely essential to keep the hotel's biggest customer, who spends in excess of $1 million annually at the Newton Marriott. The customer, the Oliver Wight Company, has issued a friendly "ultimatum" to the hotel: Construct this special facility or they will take their business elsewhere.

The hotel is prepared to build this special room to insure the continuity of many jobs, which would be negatively affected by the departure of this customer.

The fixed-seated lecture room will be located in what is now allocated as "garage" space — removed from the busy mainstream areas of the hotel. The students, middle to top echelon executives, arrive at the hotel mainly via cab or limousine services, and remain for 4-5 day training periods. Thus, this group generates a minium of traffic and parking.

Because of the intensive nature of the training programs, most of the students do not leave the hotel during their stay. Additionally, due to the fact that the lecture room will not be suitable for meals - the original class room will continue to be reserved each day of the program for students dining. Thus, no added use can be made of this space. Finally, the Oliver Wight Company, because of its importance to the hotel, has the privilege of placing a 24-hour hold on their rooms so they cannot be sold to other groups.

If permission to construct this lecture room facility is denied, the hotel will have to seek $1 million in replacement business. This will mean that a greater number of smaller groups will utilize the room presently used for classes at the hotel - thus the traffic and use of the parking lot will obviously increase.

The basic fact of the matter is that both the Newton Marriot and Auburndale residents are interested in the same goals, and the defeat of this petition will bring neither closer to our mutual objectives.

'This is not what mothers and daughters were supposed to talk about.'

Mother and daughter try to discuss nuclear war

By Dianna Muhoberac Morely

It never occured to me when our child was born, 16 years ago, that she and I would one one day discuss the possibility of life on earth ending before her 18th birthday.

Instead, I tried to imagine what the world would be like as she grew through various phases and then went out on her own. I trusted that nothing would interfere with our ability to provide for her basic needs. We'll be adequate parents, I thought. On some days, she might even think we're terrific.

That's pretty much how it went, for the first 12 years. When she was tiny, we watched her climb a crocus-covered mound, trampling all others on her way to the lavender one at the top. When she reached it, she crouched and cupped the flower in her hands as if it were a soap bubble that might burst, her face flooding with delight.

Years later, she performed in plays, drew pictures that opened our eyes wide, and wrote stories that took us by surprise — our faces glowed with delight. Throughout the years between, there were problems, but none we couldn't handle. Until that one day.

After coming home from school, our daughter spends time wandering through nearby trees to clear her head of the day's echoes. One day in February, after her usual walk, she came into the house shaking off wet snow, her face vibrant.

"Good grief, " I exclaimed, looking up from my newspaper. "The United States and the Soviet Union have thousands of nuclear weapons. It's hard to comprehend."

"Oh, my God," she whispered. "That's crazy." She removed her coat and sat opposite me at the table. "They don't need so many. Why do they do that?"

"I don't know. Some people don't feel secure unless everyone can be killed 50 times. Five times just doesn't do it for them."

"Do you know what would happen if a nuclear bomb exploded near us?" She demanded. Her cheeks were still rosy, but her eyes had turned cold.

"What is this," I asked, "a riddle?"

"If you're inwith about five miles, the heat would actually melt everthing. It would be worse than an oven ... like being on the sun!"

"Not 'inwith,' Honey," I corrected. "You mean 'within.'"

"Oh, whatever," she said, waving it aside with her hand. "But imagine ... all the snow outside would melt in a second. If you were in the desert, it would turn to glass!"

I hadn't told her specfically, in graphic terms, what nuclear weapons could do. But I shouldn't have been surprised to hear that she knew a lot. Even kids who don't care about politics do notice headlines, and they do talk to one antoher. It was clear that the "dirty work" — informing — had been done for me. It was also clear that she needed to talk about it. I took a deep breath.

"Yes," I said. "Your lungs roast in an instant. You simply don't take the next breath."

"God, that's worse than what Hitler did." She paused to consider for a moment, then she added, "Well, I'd just like to commit suicide first, before the bombs drop. You know take some sleeping pills."

"I guess most of us would," I said. "Doctors can't simply hand out pills though. It's illegal. Dropping bombs isn't."

My brain worked, and my mouth delivered the translated nerve impulses. Another part of me observed with disbelief, "This is not what mothers and daughters were supposed to talk about."

I tried a fresh start saying, "Anyway, we don't know that any bombs will be dropped." Odd, I thought, uncertainty can give a sense of security when you're feeling pinned to the wall.

"Oh, I'm sure. There's going to be a nuclear war. I just know it." She spoke as though predicting rain while looking into a very dark sky.

"Don't you think," I asked, "if we all come to realize how awful it would be, and we..."

"Nope. They don't want to. They don't care. They're jerks. They just want to blow everything up."

"I don't agree. Some people think the arms buildup will prevent war, and I think it makes war more likely, that's all."

"But they don't think they're going to be killed," she stated, "sitting up there in Washington."

"You mean down there. Washington is south. Don't you think they ever imagine what nuclear war could be like?"

"No," she said flatly."I don't think they want to."

"Maybe," I said, "but they're talking about limited nuclear war, not about destroying the whole earth."

"What do you mean ... they put up stop signs or something?"

"The drop only enough bombs to win, to use their terms. They hit only certain spots in certain countries."

"Sure," she said through her teeth. "They think it's okay to kill certain people and animals and ruin everthing, as long as they don't get killed."

"It is easy to tolerate others' misfortune," I agreed.

"Whatever that means."

"Anyway, I said, "It does take two sides to limit a war, and I can't imagine either side showing restraint. We are all trained to always give it our best shot."

"And what about an accident?" she asked.

A ninth-grader is quoted as having said, 'Knowing is terrifying; not knowning is terrifying. But not knowing is hopeless and knowing can save us all.'

"It's possible." I nodded, but felt too uncomfortable to look her in the eyes. "If a missile is headed toward either country, by accident. I guess explanations and apologies might not be effective. Victims make sore losers."

"I'm sure they don't think about it," she said, "because if they did, they wouldn't take any chances. They would get rid of all the bombs — send them out to space or something. Just don't make any more."

"Toss the recipe card out of the files?" I smiled. "Now you're talking right out of 1984. Throw it into the memory hole, right?"

"But it's not fair! I wish those guys who want to fight would just go off somewhere and have their own war. I don't want to die, too."

"Life isn't fair" I said.

"Why do you always say that?" she asked, exasparated. "I know it isn't fair. But you act like you don't even care. Just blow up the world. Big deal!"

"Sorry," I whispered. She had found me even in my best hiding place. "I don't know how to talk to you about war. I can't protect you from people who don't hear me. It hurts to admit that I can't even protect my young."

The tears came. I looked out the window at the trees in the snow. The sun, hovering low in the sky, was silver.

"Sorry, Mom." she put an arm around my shoulder.

I put my arm around her small waist and we were quiet for awhile comforting one another without words.

"Well," I said finally, "we can't sit around all afternoon. Do you need help with your homework?"

She needed drilling on the European capitols, on the parts and functions of the human brain. It was comforting, repeating the words over and over. Many psychologists encourage open, age-appropriate dialogue on nuclear concerns with children. A ninth-grader is quoted as having said, "Knowing is terrifying; not knowning is terrifying. But not knowing is hopeless and knowing can save us all."

Several years have passed since my daughter and I had our conversation, when I felt sad that the only support I could offer was a willingness to talk and my own honesty, In the interim, I've come to feel this is all anyone can offer, that's it's all anyone can offer, that's all any child would expect. And it is not an insignificant gift, for, however we adults might bumble our way through, if we can give this much of ourselves, our children will be alot stronger for it.

A few years ago my husband and I learned about an educational movement (Beyond War) that puts forth a positive alternative to our current direction.

Each of us in the family now feels that the way we deal with conflict in our own life and the way we speak with others about social change will help to move all of society toward our common goal.

We can't protect our children from a nuclear holocaust, but we can show them we're doing the best we can to prevent its occurence. Studies indicate that parents' active involvment to bring about peaceful resolution of our worldwide dilemma lessens somewhat their children's anxiety. Our own experience bears this out.

Our daughter pokes fun at us now, in a good-natured way, when we head out to Beyond War meetings or special events, or to monthly vigils with a local nuclear disarmament group (NAND). But we notice she's stopped pricking up her ears when she overhears routine news on nuclear issues, and she's talking about the future again.

Judging by her behavior, she feels that increased efforts will lessen the nuclear threat, and if she's going to grow up after all, she might as well prepare for college and for a career. Someday, she might even want to have children of her own.

improperly withheld from the public."

Adding that the School Committee's records of closed sessions "fall below" the minimum requirements of the OML, Harshbarger said, "When in doubt, the committee should err on the side of including details rather than omitting them, in view of the fact that the minutes of an executive session are the only mechanism by which the public has the opportunity to scrutinize such meetings."

Besides criticizing the sketchiness of the committee's closed session minutes, Harshbarger also noted that "the facts here indicate that the committee appears to have adopted a general policy against releasing these minutes."

The DA pointed out that "records of any executive session may remain secret as long as the publication may defeat the lawful purpose of the executive session, but no longer (DA's emphasis)."

To remedy the sketchiness of the closed session records, Harshbarger recommends the committee "reconstruct all executive session minutes from July 1, 1985 to the present so that the minutes conform to the requirements set forth in this opinion."

As for the apparent policy of not releasing closed session records, Harshbarger directed the committee to "take the necessary steps within the next three weeks to make the minutes of all executive sessions from 1982 and from January 1 to October 15, 1985 available to the public."

In the future, the DA stated, "I expect and assume" the committee will make sure its failure to release records of executive sessions "is authorized under the Open Meeting Law."

School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile refused Monday night to discuss the DA's findings against the committee, saying he hoped to get a better perspective on the legalities of the matter from a discussion with City Solicitor Daniel Funk. He did say, "It seems Scott (Harshbarger) has cited us on very technical apsects of open meeting law violations. It was not our intention to violate the spirit of the law."

Funk, saying he still needs to talk with School Committee members about the matter, commented that, as far as he could tell, the DA's complaints meant only that the committee would have to "tighten up" its procedures.

The law assures that bank accounts, insurance proceeds, uncashed gift certificates, payroll checks, customer overpayments and the like that have gone untouched for at least five years are considered by the state to be abandoned. All such accounts must be reported to the Treasurer who then attempts to notify the rightful owners of their heirs.

Gentile says raises are unrelated to cops, fire

"The mayor and I respectfully disagree on this issue," Gentile says. "I believe a majority of the police union members feel the numbers offered to teachers were fair and equitable for them. When you look at the city's ability to pay, I agree with them. If our contract agreement eventually helps them to gain a larger or greater economic contract from city, I feel good about it because they deserve it."

In addition to criticism from Mann — who is concerned that the city will have to pay for increases during the last year of the teacher contract if the state does not renew the funding mechanism — Gerard Indelicato, special assistant to Gov. Michael Dukakis, questioned the School Committee's use of professional development grants for salaries.

"I've got to say it walks a fine line in terms of fiscal responsibility," Indelicato said last week, adding that as far as he knows, Newton is the only community so far to use the state funds for contractual increases.

Gentile says that the state did not place a stipulation on the money and that other communities are considering allocating the funds for teacher raises.

"If Mr. Indelicato thought it was such a bad idea," he says, "the adminstration and the legislature would have restricted those monies from being used in that manner, but they did not do that. I don't know how familiar Mr. Indelicato is with the entire settlement, but I would be surprised if he is familiar with the entire picture to make a judgment like that."

"It would have been unreasonable for the teachers to be offered the basic settlement of 5.5 percent, with 3 percent from the city and 2.5 percent from the state," he says. "The teachers are not dumb, they knew the money was sitting there. By the same token, though, it would have been unreasonable for the teachers to expect the 5.5 percent plus the state funds."

Gentile says the new teacher's contract makes Newton salaries competitive with those of Brookline, Lexington and Wellesley. In addition, he says the early settlement will be beneficial to the students.

During negotations for the contract now in place, teachers instituted "work-to-rule", which in effect curtailed teacher involvement with extra-curricular activities. The December settlement will not go into effect until the end of the current school year. Gentile says by settling eight months early, teachers will not be distracted by negotiations that "drag on and on like they did a year ago January."

Mann blames teachers' raises for cop protests

Gerard Indelicato, special assistant to Gov. Michael S. Dukakis for education, said the committee did nothing wrong in using those state funds for raises. But he questioned the wisdom of doing so.

"I'm not saying that it's not appropriate," he said. "I am saying you have to be clear what the implications are."

The state intended distribution of the money to be worked out by teachers and school officials, Indelicato said. The funds, called professional development grants, did not have to be distributed equally.

The money as of Feb. 19 had been accepted by 194 of the commonwealth's 351 communities. As far as he knows, Newton is the only community to use the money for contractural raises, Indelicato said.

"I've got to say it walks a fine line in terms of fiscal responsibility," he said.

On the same December day teachers signed their contract - which also included a 6-percent salary hike for 1988 -the Newton Police Association rejected a smaller increase offered by the city.

Police were offered a retroactive raise of 5 percent for 1984-85, 6 percent for 1985-86, 5.5 percent for 1986-87 and 5 percent for 1987-88.

Pressed by reporters, Mann said the city is experiencing severe budget constraints and paying the teacher raises when state money expires will be another burden.

Newton is facing more than $80 million in liabilities, including around $55 million in unfunded pensions and a $9.1 million sewer-rehabilitation project, Mann said.

The federal government is cutting its revenue sharing program to cities and towns.

Dukakis has increased aid to communities to cover some of the loss, but Newton is receiving the smallest reimbursement - 10 percent - of any Massachusetts city, Mann said.

Residents could soon pay increased taxes and higher fees for city services, Mann said.

Aldermen are now deliberating a 52 percent annual increase in sewer-water charges, Mann cited as an example.

At the same time, Newton's school systems have a very low student-teacher ratios, he said.

"There's no question if they deserved it," he said of the raises given to teachers. But he added: "It's not good business."

"Well intentioned individuals sometimes err in judgment for a quick fix that has long-term implications," he said. "I'm not going to use the press to attack anybody."

Mann's comments came just hours before the third and most disruptive police and firefighter informational picket protesting their 20-month contract dispute.

The picket, held in Newton Corner, snarled Massachusetts Turnpike traffic, forcing state police to close Exit 17 for a short time during the height of the evening rush hour.

Building Dept. to address complaints against Quinn house parently illegal apartment buildings and tenements, said the three-family building is in a single-family zone.

Quinn last week insisted the building does not violate zoning because it was built for three dwellings in 1914, 'grandfathering' it from the city's 1932 zoning ordinances.

"We believe the house was built for three families," Quinn said. "Every room in the house today is exactly the same as 1914."

The last major work done on the home was in 1922, when the owners secured a permit to install a kitchen vent and a third-floor toilet, he said.

Since then the home has had only routine maintenance and normal upgrading, Quinn said. He replaced boilers that were 70- to 80-years old, the chief said.

Building Inspector Daniel Gentile has been quoted as saying the Quinn building has a permit for a two-family house.

Quinn said he purchased the premises in 1954. "I lived there a couple of years, in the third floor of all places," Quinn said.

Jaffe's letter also stated that Quinn's home has seven occupants in the three apartments - three unrelated tenants on the first floor, two unrelated tenants on the third floor and a married couple on the first floor.

Quinn does not feel the Jaffes' allegations are personal. "I don't think she has it in for me," he said. "I'm a public official. I'm a good target."

"If the lady has a beef with the city, good luck to her," he said.

The Newton woman does not feel this situation violates zoning laws, but she said the city took her and husband Leon Jaffe to court because they had eight unrelated tenants in their 58 Winthrop St. home.

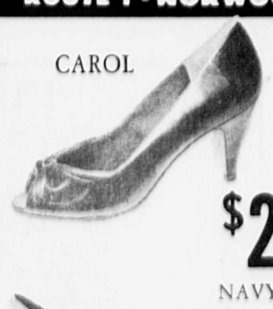

Because the Winthrop Street residence contained a second kitchen, the city regarded it as a two-family house in a single-family zone, she said.

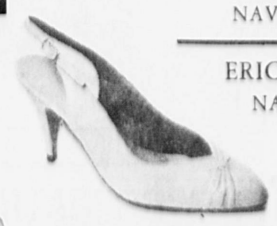

The Jaffes contend the city ordinances do not say what a 'family' is. The state's Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) is now reviewing the case.

"The city alleged I was breaking the law. His (Quinn's) situation appears to be similar to mine," Jaffe said. "I don't think it's illegal. But if mine is illegal, his is too."

Ueberroth: Sports and drugs don't mix

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Peter Ueberroth, commissioner of baseball and the man in large part responsible for the 1984 Los Angeles Olympic Games' $250 million surplus, added a new credential to his already-impressive resume yesterday at Boston College. In addition to all his other talents, Time Magazine's Man of the Year in 1984 is now predicting the weather.

"There will be a cloud drifting over baseball this year," he told those attending BC's 35th Annual Laetare Sunday Observance. "It is well-known that this cloud is called drugs."

At any other time, it would be considered unusual at the least for some 300 graduates of a Jesuit college to listen to a man talk about drugs. But this is 1986, a few months after many of the game's brightest starts testified, with immunity, at the Pittsburgh drug trials last year. Instead of questions about whether this guy has a good curveball or that guy can hit to the opposite field, fans of the national pasttime are now asking whether their favorite player prefers cocaine or marijauna.

On the job since autumn of 1985, Ueberroth has dealt with strikes by umpires and players. Dealing with those who testified in Pittsburgh, though, has been his biggest challenge as commissioner by far. He recently ruled that the offenders, although free from punishment by the judicial system, must pay a percentage of their salaries for 1986, submit to random drug tests and in the worst cases spend 100 hours over two years in "service to the community" or face a one-year suspension.

With New York Mets first baseman Keith Hernandez — who alone threatened appeal — agreeing to Ueberroth's terms this weekend, the biggest baseball scandal since the "Black Sox" fixed the 1919 World Series is over for now. Ueberroth, however, understands that while that battle may be done, the war against drugs is just beginning.

"It is time to say enough is enough already," Ueberroth told the cheering alums. "The game of baseball will no longer tolerate drugs. More important than the fact that baseball players who are using drugs are ruining their careers and their lives is the domino effect drug use by athletes has on society. How can a little junior high school two miles from here that is riddled by drug use do anything to help the students when they look up and see professional athletes using drugs?"

Peter Ueberroth speaking at Boston College.

While many in the media and elsewhere say the players came away from the drug trial with only a wrist slap, Ueberroth said the real problem, and the real solution, lies in what society as a whole does to stop the "proliferation" of drugs into mainstream America. Repeating a stance that has earned him praise from some and scorn from others, especially in the political and law enforcement fields, Ueberroth offered a seven-point solution.

"There is no single solution to this problem," he said. "Drugs affect everyone in society. They are the commodity of terrorists and the currency of terrorism."

The solution, he said, is a combination of "tough diplomacy" with drug producing nations like Columbia, border patrols using "military technology," increased law enforcement, acknowledgment by the private sector that the problem exists in the workplace and parents and teachers "who are aware of drug abuse and care enough to do something about it."

Ueberroth, a tall and tan 49-year-old who could double as a model for GQ Magazine, showed another side before discussing the drug problem.

"I'm not very smart," he said. "When I graduated from San Jose State, I finished in the top 83 percent of my class. When I filled out my entrance papers, one of the questions asked about my church preference. I said 'red brick.' If I were really smart, I wouldn't have George Steinbrenner, Ted Turner and Margie Schott's dog as bosses."

Despite the drug problem, Ueberroth said 1985 was a "very successful year" for baseball.

"1985 was a very good year," he said. "This is a sport with deep roots. The first game was played in 1875 on the very same April week where out west, Custer was making his last stand. Baseball is part of the history and fabric of this society."

As examples, Ueberroth pointed to the many milestones reached by players during the 1985 season. Tom Seaver and Phil Niekro won their 300th game, Rod Carew got his 3,000th hit and, Pete Rose broke one of the greatest records of all times, passing Ty Cobb for the most hits in a career. In addition, more people came to see a ball game in 1985 than ever before.

While it may have some warts, Peter Ueberroth is confident that the game of baseball will continue to thrive. Unlike most weather men, Ueberroth said he has some control over which way the wind blows. To eliminate drugs from the the game, however, he said society must wake up and smell the coffee, or in this case, the dope.

"When I got back, I have never been more tired, more dirty, more disgusting," Lent recalls. But, she adds, "I was happy."

Operation Raleigh marks "the 400th anniversary of the founding of America's first English-speaking colony by Sir Walter Raleigh," according to program literature.

Approximately 3,000 men and women, ages 16 to 23, will participate in three-month phases of the 1985 through 1988 expedition. During that time, they work on projects set up by teams of experienced explorers and scientists as participants make their way across six continents.

In Australia, Lent will choose between working on such projects as biological resource surveys and crocodile counts in the rivers of the area; searching for dinosaur remains in the Percival Lakes area; and recording Aboriginal rock paintings.

The treks will not be easy, according to Lent. "Basically, it involves primitive camping the whole time," she explains. "I'll be working in Australia with Aborigines. Hopefully, they'll take us hunting and we'll do funky things like that. How many people in the U.S. get to see Aborigines? Not very many."

But before she even sets foot in Australia, Lent must raise $5,500 in tuition money. To do so, she has been organizing bike-a-thons, swim-a-thons, asking sponsors to donate money on a per-mile — or lap — basis.

Lent also started an "Armchair Adventurers Club," which will provide donators "an inside look at the Australian Expedition" via a newsletter authored by herself, she says.

"If I have to sell this house, I'll get the money together," Lent exclaims. "If I have to bike for the rest of the month, I'll do it to get sponsors."

Indeed, says Lent, raising money for her future adventure may prove to be more challenging than the expedition itself. "It's not easy to approach people and ask for money," she says.

Yet, she continues, "It feels so good to convince people it's worthwhile. Once you've done that, you can do anything — just like selection weekend."

Timeless

Watercolor exhibit opens on March 14

NEWTON — The Newton Arts Center's March exhibition, "Watercolor of the 1980s: Susan Heideman, Karen Moss, Susan Shatter and Richard Yarde," runs from March 14 to April 6.

"Until recently watercolor was considered suitable primarily for small paintings and as a method for notating ideas to be completed in oil paint or acrylic. In the last few decades, however, the possibilities of watercolor have been reconsidered," states curator Roselyn K. Ablow. Ablow explains further why she brought together Heideman, Moss, Shater, and Yarde for a group exhibition.

"The artists represented in this exhibition are among those who have concentrated their major artistic efforts in this medium. "Without compromising the luminosity, brilliance and immediacy so characteristic of watercolor, these painters have expanded the scale in which they work to provide an appropriate format for their elaborately-developed pictorial structures."

Residents are invited to an opening reception to meet the artists on Friday, March 14, from 6 to 9 p.m. The public is also invited to a gallery talk with Susan Heideman on Sunday, March 23, at 3 p.m. The Newton Arts Center is located at 61 Washington Park, Newton. Gallery hours are Mon.-Fri. 9 a.m.-5 p.m. and Sun. 2-4 p.m.

At this age, you can do a lot of damage to your body.

You're picking her up at eight and your face looks like a pizza. Welcome to teenage land. A place where you can do as much damage to your body as it's trying to do to you. But you can also do your body a lot of good—simply by watching what you put into it. By cutting down on foods that are high in fat and cholesterol—like fatty meats and fried foods. And substituting foods that are lower in fat—like fish, poultry and lean meat. By replacing whole milk and cheeses with skimmed-down versions. It all adds up to a diet that helps keep your weight controlled, your energy level up and your blood cholesterol level low. And any way you look at it, looking good and feeling good can make the journey through teenage land a little less awkward. And maybe just a little more awesome.

Student art on exhibit

NEWTON — In celebration of March, Youth Art Month, the Newton Public Schools has on exhibit a vibrant and varied show of elementary school art work.

The exhibit will be on display at the Education Center Gallery, 100 Walnut St., Newtonville, through March 27, and includes work from each of Newton's 15 elementary schools.

The public is invited to view and enjoy this exciting show, which gives an overview of the drawing, painting, printmaking, collage, stitchery, and three-dimensional experiences that are part of the Newton K-6 art curriculum.

Stained glass demonstration

NEWTON — The Mall at Chestnut Hill presents the second in a series of Works-in-Progress, artistic endeavors which take place at the Mall.

Emanuel Genovese of Brookline will be appearing at the Mall during the month of March to demonstrate the art of stained glass window making. This unusual art form combines artistry with craftsmanship.

Genovese will create a "mini-studio" in the heart of the Mall, and will design, develop and fabricate two complete stained glass pieces. Shoppers are encouraged to observe, ask questions and learn about this art, which has been in existence for centuries.

Genovese has been studying, creating and teaching stained glass techniques for many years, and has been commissioned by dozens of area institutions and individuals to design stained glass windows which are each unique to themselves.

He has participated in several art festivals across the state, and has won awards for originality and quality. The first work which got underway at the Mall was a panel designed for a private residence. The second work will be a decorative piece utilizing zinc and brass as well as glass in a floral motif.

Choral concert

The Newton Choral Society will perform Haydn's "Harmoniemesse" and "Te Deum" March 16 at 4 p.m. in the Second Church, 60 Highland St., West Newton. Accompanied by full orchestra. Tickets are $6 each or $4 for seniors and students. For more information, call 527-6430.

'Grease' is opening

NEWTON — The winter production of the Newton Country Players will be the Broadway musical "Grease." The stageplay enjoyed an extended stay on Broadway in the 1970s and was then produced on the screen.

The format of this production is a departure from the regular performances of the Newton Country Players. It will be the NCP's first production set in three-quarter round.

Special attention to costume and style is paid to the era in which the play is set — the late 1950s, when everyone "liked Ike," and young people of the time wore poodle skirts, leather jackets and drove hot rods.

The NCP performance of "Grease" is under the direction and choreographic talents of Joel Conrad. Conrad has performed as an actor, dancer and singer on Broadway, television and the silver screen. His background as a dancer, including more than 1,100 performances as a soloist at Radio City Music Hall, provides the added expertise for this well-choreographed musical.

"Grease" will be presented at Lasell Junior College, Winslow Hall, Auburndale, on Friday and Saturday, March 14 and 15 and Friday and Saturday, March 21 and 22. Performances at 8 p.m. For ticket information, call 244-9538.

Israel Folkdance Festival to be held Sunday

CAMBRIDGE — Israeli dance is a celebration and Boston will be celebrating with it, at the 10th annual Israel Folkdance Festival. Joining in the celebration will be Newton residents Pam Kessler, Larry Denenberg, Janet Zerlin Fagan, Mariana Glusman, Nancy Kolodny, Sharon Reisman, Marilyn Richards and Sharon Walach.

The Israel Folkdance Festival will be held on Sunday, March 16 at 3 p.m. in M.I.T.'s Kresge Auditorium, Cambridge. Twenty groups will participate in an exuberant performance celebrating 10 years of the festival. Different types of Israeli dance will be performed, and after the performance the audience will be invited to participate.

On Saturday, March 15, a series of Israeli dance workshops will be held at M.I.T.'s Student Center, in conjunction with the 10th anniversary of the Israel Folkdance Festival. In addition, dance-related exhibits will be on display.

Tickets for the performance are $7, $6 and $4 with a $1 discount for seniors. For further information or tickets, contact M.I.T. Hillel, 253-2982.

Hospice seeking goods for auction

NEWTON — The Hospice of the Good Shepherd, Inc. in Newton is seeking community people to participate in and donate goods and services to their first Annual Spring Auction. There is a job and a place for everyone. Please contact Suzanne Mullen at 969-6130.

Exercise for seniors

NEWTON — Steven Hecht, Brookline chiropractor, will be running an exercise class for seniors beginning Friday, March 14, at 9:30 a.m. The class will be held every Friday morning. For further information, contact Pamela Meehan at 969-8030.

The Newton Corner Drop-In Senior Center is sponsored by the Department of Human Services in cooperation with the Council on Aging. Funding for the center is provided by the Newton Community Development program.

Resident a cast member in 'Arsenic'

BELMONT — "Arsenic and Old Lace," a three-act play by Joseph Kesselring has been selected for the Belmont Dramatic Club's spring production.

Among the cast members is Abby Brewster played by Barbara Patterson of Newton Centre.

The classic comedy will be presented at the Belmont Town Hall on March 21 and 22 at 8 p.m. The show is being directed by Lyn Jaffe and produced by Connie Bosse and Peg Ingolia.

The Belmont Dramatic Club invites those people interested in membership or helping with the show production to call 484-2061 for further information. Tickets are $6 for adults and $5 for seniors and students.

Teens arrested in camper

NEWTON — Two boys, 15 and 16 years old, were arrested Saturday night for breaking and entering in the nighttime after they allegedly broke into a camper parked on Watertown Street. Police responded to a report of someone breaking into a construction trailer. They found the trailer secure and were leaving the area when another radio broadcast reported the possibility of some youths breaking into a camper on Watertown Street.

The officers drove over to check it out and found the camper locked. One of the officers looked in a window and saw a boy lying down in the camper, appearing to be asleep. A woman came out of a house with the keys to the camper, and the officer woke the boy. Another boy was found hiding in the camper's bathtub. One of the boys was from Newton and the other was from Salem, N.H.

Wallets stolen from purses

NEWTON — A local woman's wallet was picked out of her pocketbook while she was shopping Saturday morning at the Stop & Shop on Boylston Street. The wallet contained $120.

Another local woman's wallet was also stolen from her pocketbook Saturday afternoon while she was shopping at Purity Supreme. It contained personal papers and $80 in cash.

Car theft thwarted by alarm

NEWTON — Thieves attempted to steal a 1983 Cadillac from a Charlesbank Road home Sunday night, but they were scared off by the car's burglar alarm, police said. The lock on the driver's side door was damaged, police said.

Man injured after collision

WEST NEWTON — A Newton man, 19, apparently suffered a seizure Sunday while driving on Walnut Street, colliding with a parked 1986 Monte Carlo, police said. The victim was taken to Newton-Wellesley Hospital for treatment after responding officers found him unconscious and convulsive, according to police records.

Indecent exposure charged

NEWTON — A man indecently exposed himself to a woman who was walking on Commonwealth Avenue last week, police said. The victim said the suspect was standing under a tree and called to her as she was walking by, police said. When the victim looked toward the tree, she saw a man with his pants down to his knees, police said. The victim ran into a nearby house to call the police. The suspect is described as a medium-built white male, about 5 feet, 10 inches tall, according to police. When the police responded, the suspect had fled the scene, police said.

Articles stolen from Dodge

WEST NEWTON — A radar detector, a tweed coat and a pair of black leather men's shoes were stolen last week from a 1985 Dodge parked at the intersection of Beacon and Grant streets, police said. The car owner is an employee of Murphy's Liquors on Beacon Street, according to police.

180 video cassettes stolen

NEWTON — About 180 video cassettes valued at $7,000 were stolen from National Video on California Street, police said. The store manager said he suspects the theft was committed by a former employee, police said. The store's inventory revealed the tapes were stolen sometime in the last two months, according to the store manager, police said.

Cash taken from oil company

NEWTONVILLE — Approximately $1,000 in cash was stolen last Wednesday from Oil Express on North Street, police said. The manager said all his employees left by 7:30 p.m., and the business is guarded all night by a Wells Fargo security officer. Management and Wells Fargo plan to conduct their own investigation, indicating they plan to give their employees lie detector tests, police said.

Manager reports assault

NEWTON — The manager of Store 24 on Watertown Street allegedly was assaulted by an employee who was fired, police said. According to the manager, the former employee went into the store last Wednesday night inquiring why he had been fired when the fight broke out, police said. The employee allegedly grabbed the manager by the neck and threw him against the wall, cutting his cheek, according to police. The former employee told responding officers that he went into the store to get his paycheck, and when the manager tried to throw him out, the fight broke out, police said.

Celebrating a century of life

NEWTON — It was a gala day for Mrs. Lena Golay as she recently celebrated her 100th birthday surrounded by her large family, her many friends and staff members of Stone Institute retirement home at 277 Elliot St., Newton Upper Falls.

A personal congratulatory message from President Reagan and greetings from Mayor Mann added to the joy of the occasion.

Mrs. Golay thoroughly enjoyed the festivities of the day and appreciated the attention bestowed upon her. It was a day for reminiscing as she recalled how a century of living had rewarded her with many happy times and the witnessing of innumerable historic and memorable events. She is also thankful that she enjoys reasonably good health.

Lena Golay with her great grandson, James McKenney of Concord

Lena Golay was born Lena Antenan, Jan. 20, 1886 in St. Imier, Switzerland, a little town nestled in the folds of the Jura Mountains near the French border. She was one of five children born to Johann and Anna (Baer) Antenan.

Free to roam the open upland meadows, Lena and her siblings had a happy childhood. Later, when school days were over, Lena went to work in the George Favre Watch Factory in Le Locle, about 10 miles from her home. It was later when she found a job in the hotel on Mont Soliel that through contact with guests from beyond her native village, she began to learn about the outside world. This newly acquired knowledge plus worsening economic conditions in her homeland triggered her desire to come to America.

On Nov. 7, 1909 at the age of 23, she arrived in New York, unable to speak a word of English. Fortunately circumstances brought her to Needham, where she secured employment with the Snelling family as a French maid and tutor to their daughter. With a steady job she began to send money home regularly to help support her widowed mother.

On Oct. 5, 1912 she married Louis H. Remond, a native of France. They lived in Waltham where two boys, Louis C. and Paul, were born to the couple. In 1925 her husband died and Lena, drawing on her knowledge gained from her job in those earlier days in a watch factory in Switzerland, was able to secure a job at the Waltham Watch Factory.

She continued to live in Waltham until her marriage in 1929 to Leon L. Golay, who also was a native of Switzerland. He was a widower with two sons, Leon and Charles, and a daughter, Violet. Lena moved with her two boys to the Golay home in Newton Upper Falls where she brought up the five children.

Once again she would lose a husband as Leon died in 1967. With her children married and moved away, Lena gave up her home, moving into an apartment in Needham where she kept house by herself. In 1983, at the age of 97, she entered Stone Institute retirement home at Newton Upper Falls.

From her two families there have come nine grandchildren and 10 great grandchildren, all of whom she loves to see at any opportunity such as holiday get-togethers and family visits.

A member of First United Methodist Church at Newton Upper Falls for many years, she had been active in the work of the various church societies and still enjoys attending services whenever she can.

Aside from a loss of hearing she enjoys good health. She remains proud of her Swiss heritage and often speaks of her homeland with fond memories of the people and activities of St. Imier in the days of long ago. As a member of the Swiss Society of Boston she always looks forward to the annual Swiss picnic in August celebrating Swiss Independence Day.

Jewels & Gems

BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY

THE CABOCHON CUT

The gem cut known as cabochon is the oldest known cut. It dates back to the crude beads found in the earliest archeological sites. The roughly shaped beads were ground and smoothly polished into round and oval-shaped domes. They then were cut in half, creating the cabochon, a flat-bottomed round or oval cut. The name itself comes from an old French word meaning "head" or "knob." Until the seventeenth century, the cabochon cut was used for almost all gems. Modern cabochons, however, are cut, ground and polished to show particular gems off to their best advantage. Some gem types are always cut in cabochons. For this reason, one should consider the gem as well as the cut.

Many gems take on different shadings depending on the shape in which they are cut. Find out which gems you like in the cut you prefer when you shop at CAROL "THE GOLD LADY." We carry loose diamonds in many cuts. And we'll remount your heirloom stones into new and modern settings. Our knowledgeable staff will explain the qualities of any stone you wish to purchase. See our beautiful gems at 109 Dalby St., Newton. Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

HELPFUL HINT

Opaque and translucent gems are most often cut in cabochons.

GOOD CURLING!

By Anne O'Connor
Correspondent

WESTON — "Good curling!"

The greeting echoes heartily among women clad in bold, heavy sweaters. Scottish tartans and tams abound amidst muffled conversation, as teams gather in the hallway.

They step onto the ice, brooms firmly in hand, and whisk themselves down to the far end of the curling house with the step-glide-step motion reminiscent of beginning skateboarders.

Soon, the first stone whizzes along the ice toward a gold and green target.

"Sweep!" bellows one of the ladies, pointing to one of the target's rings, and urging her teammates to put those brooms to use.

Thus begins the national curling tournament recently held at The Country Club in Brookline, and sponsored by the United States Women's Curling Association.

The USWCA's 38th annual national bonspiel (curling match or competition), which lasted four days, featured 32 teams from 12 states — including the Weston Curling Club, four women who have curled together for the past three years.

Originally played in Scotland, curling is a sport foreign to most Americans. But even for the uninitiated, curling is entertaining. And for the four Weston curlers — Mary Kitses of Lincoln, Carol Burgess of Duxbury, Kitty Martin of Wayland and Wendy Carberry of Wellesley — the whole point is to have fun.

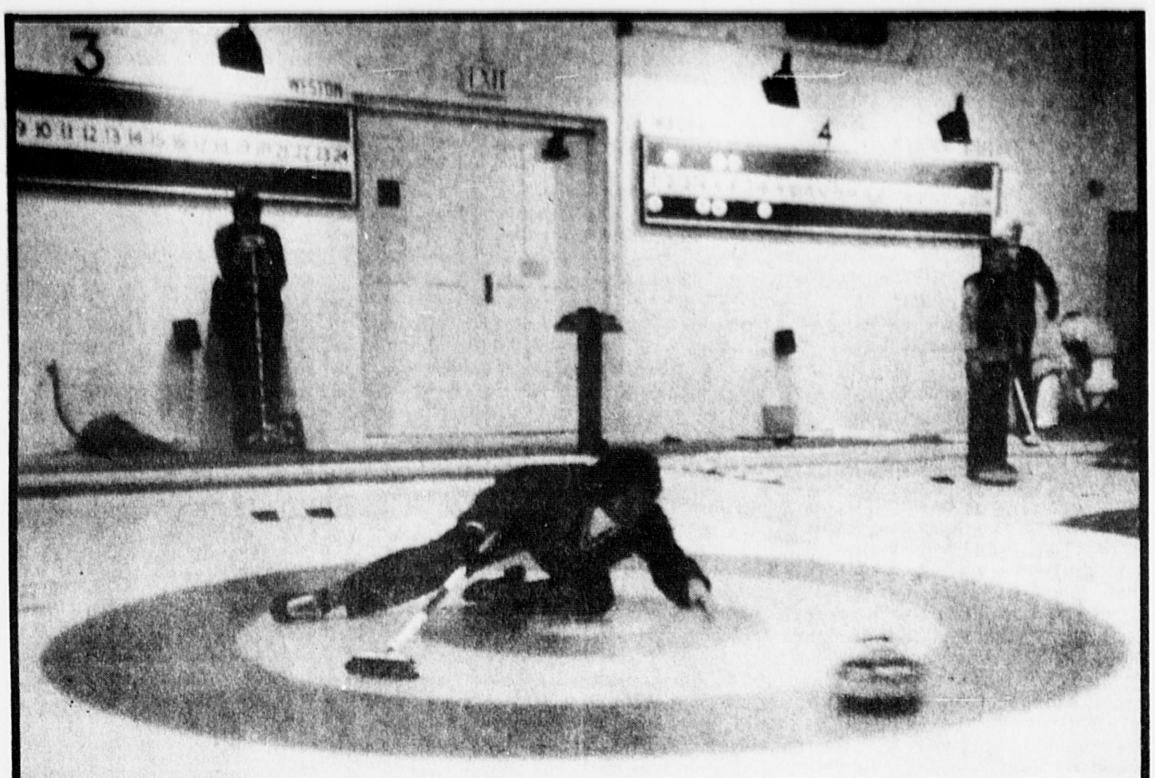

"We had a good time — we always do!" said Mary Kitses at the weekend's conclusion.

Curling gear consists essentially of mismatched shoes; the left with a sticky sole, the right made of teflon. The left shoe is intended to remain anchored to the ice and give the player balance, while the right is intended to allow the player to slide quickly along the ice's surface to and from each target.

The final prop necessary for any curling match is a broom. With that in hand, the ladies swept the ice free of whatever might interrupt or alter the intended path of their stone — 42 pounds of granite with a brightly-colored plastic handle — en route to its target.

Each game lasts approximately two hours. And this vigorous sweeping — along with the repeated lifting and shooting of stones — warms the four-member teams against the chill of the 32-degree rink.

To the outsider, the game appears a combination of bowling and shuffleboard on ice, played by women madly sweeping to keep the ice tidy. They seem to be clearing the way for what looks like futuristic tea kettles shot along the ice by their teammates. In fact, they are brushing aside tiny "pebbles" of ice created before the game by showering the surface with water.

Unlike golf, Scotland's other contribution to our sporting psyche, curling is an event foreign to most Americans. But this 'gentlemen's game' of stone and broom is thriving at the Weston Curling Club.

It is a "gentlemen's game," says Ben Wellington, member of The Country Club and volunteer official for the bonspeil, and it requires the strategy of a mild game of chess. Two hours of curling is as exhausting as playing two hours of robust tennis, Wellington adds.

Although physical strength can help, finesse and experience in reading the ice surface are essential.

According to Wellington, the sport's name is derived from the curved path a stone takes as it glides down the ice. The path is rarely straight because of the friction caused by ice pebbles. Properly delivered stones should rotate three to five times en route to the target area, Wellington said, producing a subtle arc not unlike a bowler's hook.

Each 42-pound stone is made from polished granite, concave on the bottom and perfectly symmetrical in shape.

A player delivers the stone by gripping the brightly-colored handle and "shooting" it to the other end of a 42-yard rink, aiming for a 12-foot target called the "house." Sweeping the ice can extend the path of a weakly-delivered stone or straighten its curve.

The game consists of 10 "ends," Wellington explained, comparable to innings in baseball. Each player "delivers" two stones for her team per end. When all 16 stones have been delivered, the end is complete, points are calculated and players switch sides.

A team's four players are called the lead, the second, the third, and the skip. The skip chooses the order of play for her teammates before the game begins, and during the game gives strategy for the placement of each stone. The skip is the last team member to deliver her pair of stones.

In play, the lead sets her stone from one end of the rink, while the skip stands near the house. If the other two team members deem it necessary, they sweep the ice in front of the lead's stone. The lead from the opposing team follows with her delivery.

Next, the second and third shoot their stones, alternating with the opponents. The skips from both teams then set their stones before tabulating points in that particular end.

To score a point, a team must have one stone closer to the center of the target than the opposing team's nearest stone. Sometimes, a "measurer" enters the rink to determine which stone is actually the closest, but the players are usually the ones who decide on a stone's proximity to the house.

Opposing teams discuss their disagreements and review breaches of rules among themselves. According to Wellington, calling on an umpire for clarification of rules shows a breakdown in the inter-team friendship so closely associated with curling.

And this friendship, even among members of teams who had never met, was apparent during USWCA's bonspeil.

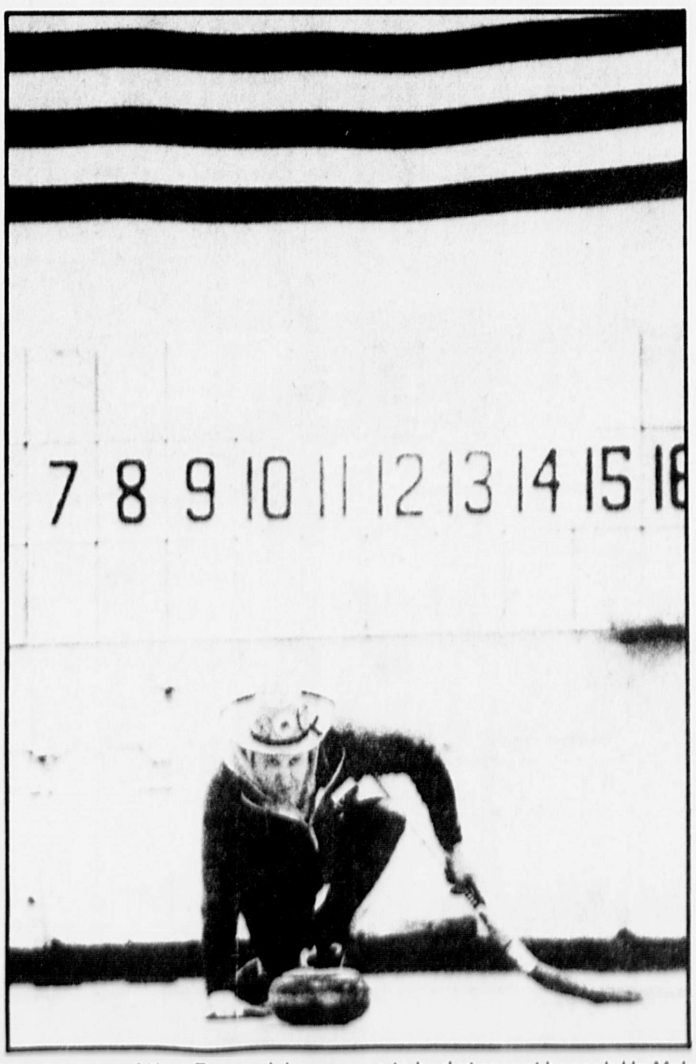

The Weston Curling Club competed with teams from Nebraska, Wisconsin, and North Dakota. There were teams there from as far away as Alaska.

Before getting to the USWCA's national competition, Weston had played six other Boston-area teams. Their usual schedule, however, involves playing the Brae Burn Curling Club and the Wellesley Curling Club at Broomstone's, a Wayland curling rink they share with those two teams.

Broomstone's (notice two vital curling props in the name) is a typical "curling house" with a lounge upstairs above the ice, where opponents meet after a bonspeil for good cheer and good drink.

"Thank you; good game!"

Accompanied by more handshakes, the words echo amidst louder conversation and laughter. The curlers ascend the stairs, where photographs, awards, and old stones glimmer in the light of a roaring fire.

It makes winters worthwhile

Curling is a sport which originated in Scotland in the 1600s. From there, it spread to North America, at first in Montreal, Canada, and is now the national sport of Canada, according to Ben Wellington, an official at the USWCA's bonspeil.

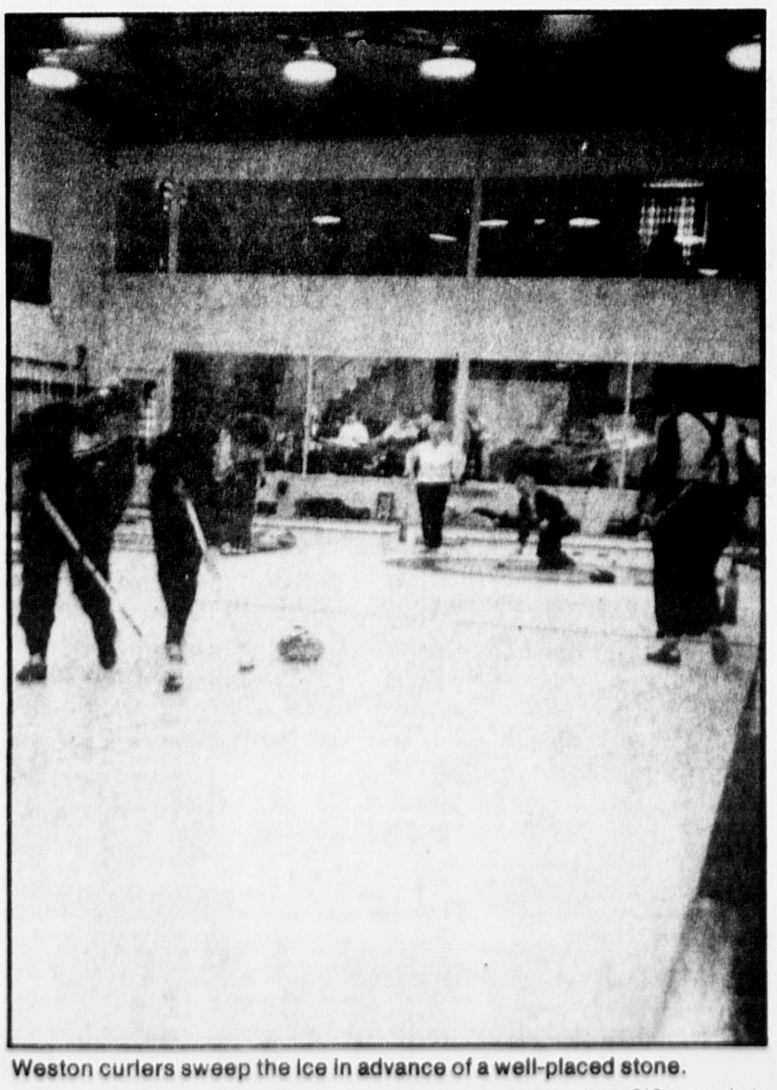

There are more curlers over the age of eight in Canada than there are hockey players, boasts Wellington, a member of The Country Club. That statistic may seem surprising to New Englanders who regularly see Canadian flags on hockey rinks, while watching the Bruins or the Whalers, but he claims it's true with almost Canadian pride.

American curling has been gaining popularity, although much more in the Midwest than on the East Coast. Out there, a number of colleges have curling teams, and high schools include curling as one of their varsity sports. Northeastern enthusiasts say curling makes winter worthwhile.

Here in Boston, there are seven curling clubs, some which rent ice and some which own their own curling houses.

One place to find curling ice is The Country Club in Brookline. TCC, whose curling house was built in the 1920's, has the oldest indoor curling house in America.

Some of the answers for problems with home appliances

Q. Help! My wife's Sears portable dishwasher, model No. 587.760614, serial No. 1706574-1077, is acting up, and she is threatening to buy a new one. With the controls set on Pots and Pans and Normal temperature, the machine will run through four cycles and then fill up with water but never go into the Wash cycle. The timer will run on through the other cycles but the machine doesn't drain the water. If you open the door (to a cloud of steam) and leave it open for 15 to 30 minutes to let it cool down, then the machine goes right into the wash cycle and completes the other cycles normally.

I have replaced both thermostat and timer, and checked the incoming water temperature (125 F) with a candy thermometer. The Sears serviceman said the main motor was bad, but that doesn't make sense. I'm sure there is a simple solution to this but I can't find it. Any help you can offer would be greatly appreciated.

A. I think the service people are probably right. It is very possible that water has gotten into the main motor upper bearing due to a slight leak in the water seal. The water may have formed rust on the bearing which puts a drag on the motor and causes it to overheat. When this happens, the temperature overload switch on the motor opens and the motor down in 15 or 30 minutes, the overload switch again makes contact and the motor runs normally.

The cure, as the Sears serviceman suggests, is to replace the motor because it is a sealed assembly not intended to be disassembled for servicing.

Q. I have a General Electric combination refrigerator/freezer, model No. TC466VD, that quite often gets so cold it freezes everything in the refrigerator portion as well as in the freezer section. What is wrong with it?

A. It sounds as if your 1961 refrigerator compressor may need to be replaced. Over the years, the compressor may have worn internally. Now it is unable to compress enough of the refrigerant to satisfy the temperature control for the refrigerator section. The compressor has to run and run to try to satisfy the control, and thus freezes the food.

To help get a little more life out of your refrigerator before you make the expensive decision to replace the compressor, try cleaning the condenser thoroughly. To do this, unplug the refrigerator and remove the bottom grille cover. You may also have to move the refrigerator out from the wall for easier access. Use a vacuum cleaner with a long, narrow brush, similar to a bottle brush, to remove all the dust, cobwebs and pet fur that may have accumulated on the condenser fins and tubes. A large accumulation could insulate the condenser so well that it cannot function effectively and this would put an extra load on the compressor system.

Most appliance parts stores sell special condenser cleaning brushes if you cannot find a suitable brush around the house. Once you have thoroughly cleaned the condenser, clean the area around and under the refrigerator to slow down dust buildups in the future. Then push the box back in place and plug it in. Make sure the fan motor runs.

Carpeting is versatile

By The Associated Press

Some interior decorators think of each room in a house as having five walls — with the fifth "wall" being the floor.

For many homeowners, the floor acts as a background for a room's textures, colors and furnishings.

Carpeting is one of the most versatile and dramatic ways to cover a floor, according to the Du Pont "Antron" Home Decorating Guide, which says carpets can pull together and unify all of a room's decorating components.

A major household investment, carpeting requires care in matching its selection to each room's function with the carpet's fiber, performance features, texture and color.

Once the fiber has been determined, the next step is to select the carpet texture. Varying textures and patterns adds spice to a room and can help to define its style,the guide says.

Textures can be rough to the touch, as in tweed, Berber or level-loop, or it can be smooth, (like plush velvet or Saxony). Patterns can range from a tiny pin-dot print to a bold, abstract geometric.

Mixing a rough Berber carpet with soft suede furniture and the polished look of glass results in a sophisticated, contemporary look. Another option is blending a patterned carpet with another pattern used in the drapes or upholstery. Patterns blend together well when they are color and design related.

An elegant velvet plush or Saxony carpet with a cut-pile pattern helps give a formal dining room or living room a rich, luxurious look.

A family room, children's bedroom or multipurpose room that takes a lot of wear-and-tear should be carpeted with a densely constructed carpet like a loop-pile or low cut-pile.

Choosing a color scheme includes decisions on color groups — warm colors, such as reds, yellow, browns and oranges, or cool colors like blues, greens or grays — and on clor intensities.

Furniture should be selected with room size and function in mind. Whether it's early American, post-modern or traditional, the proportions of the furnishings should be compatible with the room size.

In decorating a living room, choose comfortable furnishings and arrange them in groups that encourage conversation. If it's a bedroom, consider creating an office in a corner or an entertainment center along a wall to extend the room's livability.

Heart disease and stroke can cheat you out of the best years of your life.

N. E. Spring Flower Show runs through March 16

BOSTON — For the 115th consecutive year, Bostonians will enjoy a first breath of spring courtesy of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society. During annual New England Spring Flower Show which runs through Sunday, March 16 at Bayside Exhibition Center.

Featuring three and one half acres of landscaped spring gardens in full bloom, Boston's Flower Show is one of the world's biggest–and best–horticultural exhibitions.

The 1986 Flower Show celebrates spring in "Enchanted Places." According to Richard Daley, executive director of the Massachusetts Horticultural Society, "The Flower Show has always given people a preview of spring and a quick escape from the New England winter. So this year, we challenged ourselves to transport show-goers not just into a greenhouse, but to all the enchanted places that spring makes us think of."

The enchantment begins immediately. Visitors enter the Flower Show through an "allee" formed by the spectacular Stone Family Acacias–in full golden bloom.

The spectacular vista opened up by the Acacias leads to Allen Haskell's minutely detailed Italian garden. According to Haskell, a long-time Flower Show exhibitor who hails from New Bedford, the Italian garden will be complete with flowering plants and shrubs, fountains, topiary, and classical sculpture.

A Victorian greenhouse (imported from England and reconstructed at Bayside), a camellia garden (created by the staff of the Isabella Stewart Gardner Museum), and a cool Arcadian wildflower glen (courtesy of the New England Wildflower Society) are just a few of the most enchanting places at the 115th annual Flower Show. In all, nearly 60 exhibitors will create natural habitats for thousands of varieties of flowering plants. For example, Connecticut's famed White Flower Farm–a first-time–participant in the New England Spring Flower Show–will display more than 200 varieties of flowering perennials, shrubs and vines all in a single, home-like garden setting.

There's lots to learn at the Flower Show, too. The Massachusetts Co-operative Extension Service is presenting a special exhibit on the benefits of having certain insects in home gardens. Entitled 'Good Bugs on Parade,' the Extension Service exhibit introduces curious gardeners to some of the area's friendlier garden creatures. Live insect colonies will be on display.

For visitors interested in making enchanting gardens of their own, the Horticultural Society has teamed up with the Grower's Market of Cambridge by offering a garden resource center. Free soil testing, tool-sharpening tips, and computer garden planning are among the resources offered. MHS Director Daley sees the resource center as "a full service exhibit," remarking that "the center addresses virtually all of the fundamental aspects of gardening, and has something special to offer gardeners of any level of expertise." The garden resource center will be located in the retail section of the Flower Show where visitors may purchase a myriad of horticultural products–from tropical plants to garden sheds and roto-tillers.

The nine-day Flower Show is open to the public daily from 10 a.m. to 10 p.m., except Sundays when show hours are from 10 a.m. to 8 p.m. Tickets at the door are $6 each; children ages 6-12 only $1; under six free when accompanied by a parent. Senior citizens are admitted for $5 at all times.

The Bayside Exposition Center is easily accessible by public transportation, and plenty of parking is available. The facility is wheelchair accessible. For further information, contact the Massachusetts Horticultural Society at 262-8780.

Exotic finishes for the home

By Barbara Mayer
AP Newsfeatures

Petrified wood, sharkskin, crushed pen shells on furniture, marble veining on fabrics and walls: it's all part of the current decorating scene. Believe-it-or-not surfaces that delight the eye as they play tricks on the imagination are all the rage these days.

Both real and simulated exotic materials and finishes are appearing in the well-decorated living rooms of the wealthy and on the pages of shelter magazines for those with more down-to-earth budgets. While exotic finishes are far from new, they are suddenly fashionable. Reasons cited for their rise include a trend toward more ornamented surfaces and the growing popularity of formal and traditional styles.

Painted finishes are also being used on walls and furniture by do-it-yourselfers. As a result, paint manufacturers are beginning to produce finishing kits, and retailers have begun offering the necessary glazes and oil-based paints in greater profusion.

Christopher Adlington, design director for Lee Jofa Fabrics, noted that the firm's two "Marbles" fabric collections which imitate marble have been among its most popular since the introduction of the first in 1981. Adlington found the hand-made originals at a trade fair in England in 1979, but it took several years to develop the necessary technology to reproduce them acceptably, he added.

The high degree of expensive hand-labor needed to produce these finishes once priced them out of range of almost everybody. Today's improved screen printing technology, however, has made it possible to replicate the look at more modest prices.

Adlington sees the trend toward the dramatic finishes as lasting for a long time.

"There has always been a terrific interest in trompe l'oeil and faux effects," he said. "After all, they are the ultimate illusion and are totally intriguing and fascinating."

Do-it-yourself is an important aspect of the new interest in illusionary effects. Leslie Anne Sacks, a textile designer for Lee Jofa, recently took up the art of faux finishing herself. She learned how to imitate marble, bricks and the skywith clouds in it in paint and special glazes at the Finishing School, Great Neck, N.Y.

Each faux finish has a different set of requirements, she said. She plans to use one formula to create a console in the foyer of her home. Eventually, she hopes to translate the techniques she has learned to textiles and artwork.

Ladies Auxillary to honor resident at dinner-dance

WATERTOWN — The Ladies Auxillary of Italian American Veterans of Post 30, Watertown, are sponsoring a Testimonial Dinner Dance in honor of the Department President Leona Bartolomucci of Newton.

Chairlady Mary Ciommo reports that this gala affair, will be held on Saturday, March 15, at the American Legion Post 440 on California Street, Newton.

Leona is well-deserved of this honor, as she has been active in all phases of volunteer hospital work, and Community Services both in Watertown and Newton. When she joined Auxillary Post 30 she became involved in all fundraisers and events and all committees for the department.

She became auxillary president and was elected for five terms. Bartolomucci was elected as department president in Chicopee in June 1985. She has given a helping hand to her auxillary members, to the needy, to the elderly and to the Veterans Administration Hospital.

Head table guests include Marilyn Devaney, Councilor of Watertown, who will be Toastmistress; John Devaney; National Commander Anthony Alfano and Lena Alfano of Rhode Island; National Auxillary Jr. Vice Joanne Torchio of Watertown; State Commander Joseph Albert and Pauline Albert of Fitchburg; Post 30 Auxillary President Rose Lapietro of Watertown; Chairlady Mary Ciommo of Belmont; and honored guest Leona Bartolomucci of Newton.

Sex discrimination in insurance coverage tops B'nai B'rith meeting

The New England Regional Board of B'nai B'rith Women recently met at the Newton Marriott Hotel. Leadership from the various chapters and units in the New England area attended a luncheon followed by keynote speaker, Norma Shapiro, League of Women Voters of Massachusetts, who discussed "Discrimination in Insurance Coverage." Ms. Shapiro gave an informative session regarding the current status of women relative to insurance sex discrimination in Massachusetts. She explained that if women gain insurance equality with men it will mean $4 million per year in increased annuities paid to retired women; $5 million per year in increased life insurance savings paid out to older women, equaling what men get with the same policies; 450,000 women charged tens of hundreds of dollars less per year for medical expense insurance, with pregnancy covered as fully as any other expense; and 150 women charged tens to hundreds of dollars less per year for disability insurance.

Analysis shows that there is no such thing as "fair" sex discrimination. Insurers use it to manipulate prices and inflate profits at the expense of women. Sex discrimination in insurance is a civil rights abuse, measured by the economic harm it inflicts on women.

The women attending were encouraged to contact their state representatives and state senators and urge them to support bills in favor of unisex insurance rates and benefits and to end sex discrimination.

Other business conducted over the weekend included reports from Amy Wolk, B'nai B'rith Girls representative to New England Regional Board and Peter Gray, AZA Representative to New England Regional Board regarding the activities of the B'nai B'rith Youth Organization. Edna Glass, president of the Greater Boston Council (Natick), gave an update regarding the Council's activities and Toby DiPietro, president Shelanu Council (Revere), gave an update regarding the Council on the North Shore's activities. Anita Simon (Brookline), chairman of Awards Day to be held on May 4 at the Holiday Inn in Newton, reported on plans for this day, followed by Elaine Kaplan (Newton), chairman of Membership Continuity and Awards Chairman, who explained the various awards that will be presented on May 4. Jessie Lipson (Marblehead), chairman in charge of Programming, reported on new programs recently developed by the National B'nai B'rith Women's organization and currently available to chapters as well as other organizations regarding women in the workplace. Ellen Michaelson (Sharon), South Shore Cluster Coordinator, and Francine Rothschild (Holliston), Metro West Cluster Coordinator, discussed plans in their respective areas for new cluster groups of BBW being formulated. Eunice Berger (Randolph) reported on a recent Direct Solicitation Campaign and phone-a-thons held throughout the area, which proved quite successful. Natalie Bernstein (Brookline), membership chairman, gave a report on the latest membership campaign.

Food preparation center in your kitchen is usually placed between refrigerator and sink. The practical minimum countertop length is 30 inches, provided it's adjacent to the countertop over the food-storage center. Otherwise, add six or more inches. The disposer should be convenient to the food preparation center. Stored within reach should be knives, peelers, graters, salad bowls and other utensils used for food preparation jobs. It's not only important to have space for your preparation activities, but you also need storage space for the utensils and supplies necessary for the job.

NEWTON — Limited parking, restrictive zoning and rent control could be the tools to maintain the intimate, tranquil atmosphere of Newton Highlands.

Various Highlands residents pushed these ideas at a recent Village Study meeting as nearly everyone agreed their commercial center at Lincoln and Walnut streets is close to ideal right now.

"Newton Highlands is probably the center that functions best as a village," Thomas Mangione of Chester Street told representatives of Connery Associates of Winchester.

The Highlands is the 11th village center so far visited by Connery, hired to perform the city's $191,000 Village Study. The firm hopes to produce a plan for the city's future development by June 1987.

Connery has divided the village into two commercial centers, the one at Lincoln-Walnut, the other at the Purity Supreme shopping center south of Route 9.

Connery consultant Robert Catineau said the two commercial areas have the capacity for more than 500,000 square feet of new commercial and office space under present zoning. That is a little less than twice the amount already there, according to Connery's figures.

Residents were concerned exclusively about the future of the Lincoln-Walnut area. Their fears were not eased even when Catineau told them two-thirds of the potential development exists along Route 9.

Right now, the Lincoln-Walnut section of the Highlands is an enclave of Victorian architecture that residents appreciate, Mangione said.

The small stores and relaxed atmosphere of the center encourage walking, said Frank Aguilera of Hartford Street. The Highlands business area is a personal, "face-to-face" community where most residents know each other, he said.

Large developments and stores that would replace such quaint architecture with a "new and modern" look would disturb village life, Mangione said.

"The popularity of the center will in fact allow it to grow in that fashion," Catineau said at one point. "Unless, of course, present zoning changes."

Other residents said high rents could drive out the center's small shops in favor of larger chain stores. Customers from throughout the city and the region then would be drawn to the village, they said.

"If there are high rents, the small people are going to be pushed out," said Florence Osman of Plymouth Road.

She urged Catineau and city officials to look into commercial rent control as a way of keeping neighborhood-oriented stores.

The crowd applauded when she said, "I came from Brooklyn, N.Y., and I just love this little town."

In Martha's Vineyard, people banded together around the slogan "Sock the Mac," preventing a MacDonald's from opening there.

But the Lincoln-Walnut Center already may be succumbing to city- and regionally-oriented stores, according to an informal analysis performed by Ann Herrnstadt and three other Highlands residents.

Connery's figures show about two-thirds of the village center's stores are oriented to neighborhood services.

Herrnstadt said the informal review revealed 13 Lincoln-Walnut businesses cater to the neighborhood, and from 35 to 40 appeal to a city-wide market, she said. A dozen of those also draw from the metropolitan region, she said.

She and others noted the center's traffic congestion and parking shortage actually may retard the swing to a more regional market.

"To a certain extent, lack of parking is a protection," one resident said. "More parking brings in more cars. We don't think we should provide lunches for Winchester."

"One way to drive down rents is to choke off traffic," said Alan Dolmatch of 50 Hartford St.

The city could make illegal the joining of commercial sites into a single development and it could limit businesses to the first floor of buildings in village centers, said Donald Marthei. The city's Zoning Review Committee (ZRC) has rejected both ideas, he said.

ZRC member Brian Yates said the committee has suggested limiting "as of right" commercial development to the first two stories in a business district, among other restrictions.

Another ZRC proposal would require a developer to secure a special permit to eliminate a residence in a commercial district, he said.

The ZRC recommendations are now being studied by the aldermanic Zoning Amendment Committee.

Alderman Rodney Barker said it would take some time for the committee to complete its work. He suggested residents support the proposed moratorium against development as a stop-gap measure until then.

Republicans hold election of delegates

NEWTON — Newton Republicans gathered across the city and elected delegates to the April 12 convention at the Centrum in Worcester.

According to Republican City Chairman Alvin Mandell, this year's election indicated renewed interest among the electorate with many more people turning out than has been the case in prior years. There is a new enthusiasm apparent and many new faces attended the ward meetings where the elections took place.

Elected from the wards were the following:

Ward 5: Chairman Arnold Garrison, Abrahm Sarafian, Betsy R. Flemming and Raymond L. Roberts.

In addition to be the above delegates the following are ex-officio members to the convention: Mayor Theodore D. Mann, State Committeeman Alvain Mandell, Frances E. Shaer, President of the Newton Republican Club and Robert Marcus, State Committee.

Four Corners residents want village-like flavor

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The heart of Four Corners is an asphalt-covered and automobile-oriented commercial strip towered over by a controversial three-story office building.

Some 75 residents recently told Connery Associates of Winchester they want a change. Their center should evolve a village-like atmosphere, they said.

The development of residences, green space and small neighborhood stores would achieve that goal, some said.

Others said a pedestrian safety hazard at Walnut and Beacon streets - the commercial heart of Four Corners - and a parking spillover from business parking lots onto area streets must be addressed.

The meeting at St. Paul's Episcopal Church enabled Connery to summarize its study of existing conditions in the village center and hear residents ideas on the future of Four Corners.

Hired to do the city's $191,000 Village Study, Connery has held meetings in 10 other centers. The firm hopes to develop a comprehensive development plan for Newton by June 1987.

As it has at nearly every other stop, Connery painted the grim picture of a neighborhood that could be overwhelmed by commercial and office development.

Under existing zoning, Four Corners could add 230,723 square feet of such development, almost 1 1/2 times the amount already there. Around 12 million square feet of commercial and office space could be built citywide - around 2 1/2 times of what exists now - unless zoning is changed.

"It's not going to happen tomorrow," the firm's president, John Connery, said. "At the present rate, you're looking 20 to 30 years down the road."

A village atmosphere can be attained by limiting new buildings to 2 1/2 stories with stores on the street level only and residences above, said Walnut Street resident Alex Frisch.

The top or half-story would have a sloping roof to blend with the surrounding residences, said Frisch, a member of the city's Urban Design and Beautification Committee.

He said the city should regulate store signs and facades throughout Newton. Most Four Corner establishments show little or no concern for aesthetics, he said.

"Unlike (Newton's) established villages, you could probably demolish most of the buildings and it would be an improvement," said Frisch.

Several residents said developer Jach Antaramian's three-story office building at Walnut and Beacon streets is the type of construction they do not want.

The building aroused controversy because it is set back only a few feet from the intersection. "It's a disgrace," said Kay DiRusso of Walnut Street.

Emily Rando of Montvale Road suggested the development of a continuous citywide green space like the Fenway in Boston. The green belt could begin at Cold Spring's Park and run to Cheesecake Brook on the Western side of the Massachusetts Turnpike, she said.

Right now, Four Corners is automobile-oriented, raising parking and pedestrian concerns.

Unlike other village centers, there is no legal street parking, Connery said. Spaces are all privately owned, many of which are in asphalt lots servicing mini malls.

Since many of the businesses draw customers from throughout the city, vehicles at times spill over onto streets, some residents said.

Marilyn Graham of Beaconwood Road said the Diamond Bakery, the Star Kosher Market and the Delitizer draw so many customers on Sunday morning that cars block streets.

"People can't get in and out because of an invasion that comes to buy their lox and bagels," she said.

Traffic at the intersection of Beacon and Walnut streets makes pedestrian crossing hazardous, some said. Area children would have to use that intersection to reach the new library proposed for the junction of Homer and Walnut streets.

"I've seen small children come to that intersection and there's no way," said Valerie Norwood of Hyde Street.

Connery noted the state's traffic policy the last 30 years has been to get vehicles through an intersection as smoothly as possible, rather than to accommodate pedestrians.

"To address what you're saying, you have to change public image and public policy," he said. "Are intersections for people or cars?"

The Four Corners business center developed because the city put commercial zoning where two major roads — Walnut and Beacon streets — meet, he said after the meeting.

What resulted is a commercial strip that conflicts with the ideal of an intimate, friendly center most residents want, he said.

People want a village that has "the butcher, the baker and candlestick maker," a place where everyone knows each other, he said.

Centre locals seek reversal of business market changes

By Les Orsini

NEWTON CENTRE — The business market in Newton Centre is changing and many of its residents want to reverse that trend.

Once a haven for small, neighborhood stores, the village center now has many businesses that attract customers from across the city, residents said.

Not only is this trend harming the center's old New England village atmosphere, but it is drawing cars to an area with a severe parking shortage and significant traffic congestion, some said.

"If I were to offer you a purpose, it would be to give us more open space and fewer cars, a less regional and a more village (type of) center," Elliot Feldman of Chase Street told Connery Associates of Winchester.

Hired by the city to conduct the $191,000 Village Study, the Winchester firm hopes to develop a comprehensive growth plan for Newton by June 1987.

Since mid-January, Connery has been holding meetings in the city's various centers to gather residents ideas on the future of their villages and to summarize its study of existing conditions.

John Connery, the firm's president, told the audience of around 120 residents that 1 million square feet of commercial and office space could be built in Newton Centre under present zoning. That figure is almost 1 1/2 times the existing amount.

Development prospects in Newton Centre are actually less than in the average village center. According to Connery's figures, the city's villages could add 12 million square feet of commercial and office construction, 2 1/2 times what is already there.

"The feeling is this is a proposition 2 1/2 none of us ever voted for," said Emily Rando of Montvale Road.

"Zero growth is a possibility," Barbara A. Levy of Oxford Road said, drawing applause. "Consider that Newton Centre should not grow in the near future."

Connery explained the 12 million square feet of new development is only a potential long-range figure under existing zoning. Actual development would be limited by market forces as well as any zoning changes, he said.

"Although it's a theoretical number we feel comfortable with, it'll probably never happen," he said.

Feldman said the center is gradually being taken over by stores with a citywide market, such as banks, expensive clothing establishments, even hair salons.

According to Connery's figures, 43 percent of the village center's stores are oriented to a neighborhood market, while 57 percent cater to customers from across the city.

The center has many buildings of historical significance that could be endangered by new development, said Levy. She noted that the old Holden Taxi establishment, which once was a baggage storage building at the MBTA station on Union Street, is being torn down.

She recommended Connery and the city consider anti-demolition ordinances and legislation that would make Newton Centre a protected historic district.

To ease the area's parking shortage and preserve its village atmosphere, Feldman suggested converting the parking lot in the heart of the center to green space and constructing parking underneath.

He and other residents said employees and commuters take up existing parking, which spills over to surrounding neighborhoods.

Connery said Newton Centre has a parking supply deficit of 579 spaces, the most of any Newton village. Extensive meter feeding makes it difficult for shoppers to find convenient parking, he said.

Barbara Levy of Nahanton Street, who owns Chandler/Levy Hardware in Newton Centre, said the lack of public parking is helping to drive small businesses out of the center. She said she pays $200 a week for her 12 employees to feed the meters.

But some residents said more parking could increase traffic in the center, which already becomes congested at the intersections of Beacon and Centre streets and Beacon Street and Langley Road.

Shown smaller than actual size of 8½" high.

One of Frederic Remington's best known and dramatic works — "The Rattlesnake" depicts in vivid detail the classic moment as horse and rider encounter a startled snake, while on the trail. The few original bronzes, made by Remington in 1905, are rare and have sold at auction for over $135,000. Now this ⅓ size reproduction is available for the unusual offering price of only $195.00 per sculpture.

The fine reproduction was produced under the direct supervision of Ms. Christine Roussel — former Director of the Reproduction Studio of the Metropolitan Museum of Art and creator of fine Remington reproductions for The Nelson Rockefeller Collection.

Each Rattlesnake replica will be created in cold-cast bronze — a medium that enables the casting of finer detail than the traditional hot-cast method. Every sculpture will be individually cast from a blend of powdered bronze and resins. Once the casting is completed, it will be finished with a rich patina, similar to the original. North girls down Boston English in South final

Rogers gives Tigers crown

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

EASTON — Junior point guard Wendy Rogers had the touch, the Newton North Tigers had the desire, and Saturday afternoon at Stonehill College, the payoff was a Division I South Sectional championship.

On the strength of 14 fourth-quarter points by Rogers, Newton North turned the tables on previously unbeaten Boston English, shocking the Bulldogs, 56-55, to capture the sectional crown and the right to play for the Eastern Mass. title.

The Tigers survived a seven-point deficit early in the fourth quarter and a three-point disadvantage with a minute showing before two hoops by Rogers, the last piercing the hoop with 24 seconds left, set the North bench in a frenzy.

When English All-American Tonya Cardoza, the most talked about female hoopster this side of Worcester, bounced a midcourt prayer off the back of the rim with no time showing, bedlam broke out on the North side.

"I'm just so proud. When we were down we never gave up," Newton North Coach Irene Cucina said after her team was presented the South Sectional championship plaque. "We showed a lot of courage and heart. When Tonya's shot missed and the buzzer rang, it was just such a relief."

With the victory, Newton North advanced to the Eastern Mass. finals and was to have faced North Sectional champ Methuen (58-51 winner over Boston Latin) Tuesday at the Brandeis gym.

North's main concern entering Saturday's showdown was Cardoza, a heavily recruited senior forward with a 27 points-per-game habit. Using a box-and-one defense for most of the contest, the Tigers held the English scoring machine to 22 points, the first time in tournament action this year that Cardoza has not hit for her average.

"We didn't set a goal to go out and kill English," Cucina said. "We wanted to keep Tonya under 30 points. If we did that, we knew that we would meet our goal and we would probably win."

It sounds simple enough, but ask North forward Carolyn Natale how it really was. The 5-7 senior drew Cardoza-duty and, after her shadow had poured in 13 first-half points, Natale limited the 5-9 Cardoza to just nine points in the second half.

"The key for Carolyn was not to watch her (Cardoza's) feet, but to watch her eyes and follow her hips," Cucina said.

Boston English coach Ernie Green said that while Cardoza was not in true form Saturday, shooting "less than normal," the Tigers did a fine job in holding her down.

"Newton played her tough," Green, a Waltham resident, said. "They forced us to go the other way."

While Cardoza was having a tough time getting open for the shot, Rogers had a field day. North's lefty point guard has been an unsung hero all season and over the past few games has been just short of incredible.

First off, Rogers outscored Cardoza by two points in the game, 24-22. The 5-6 junior also cleared nine rebounds, had three steals, and dished off five assists.

"Wendy, like (Suburban League leading scorer and teammate) Carol Ventura, has that Larry Bird type of intensity and dedication," Cucina said. "We practice for two hours every day, but Wendy plays for four hours. She plays two hours on her own. She just loves basketball."

Rogers almost singlehandedly brought the Tigers back from the dead in the fourth period. Newton trailed by four, 48-44, with 4:08 left when Rogers canned an outside shot, then rushed forward to steal the English inbounds pass and convert it for the tie, 48-48 with 3:24 remaining.

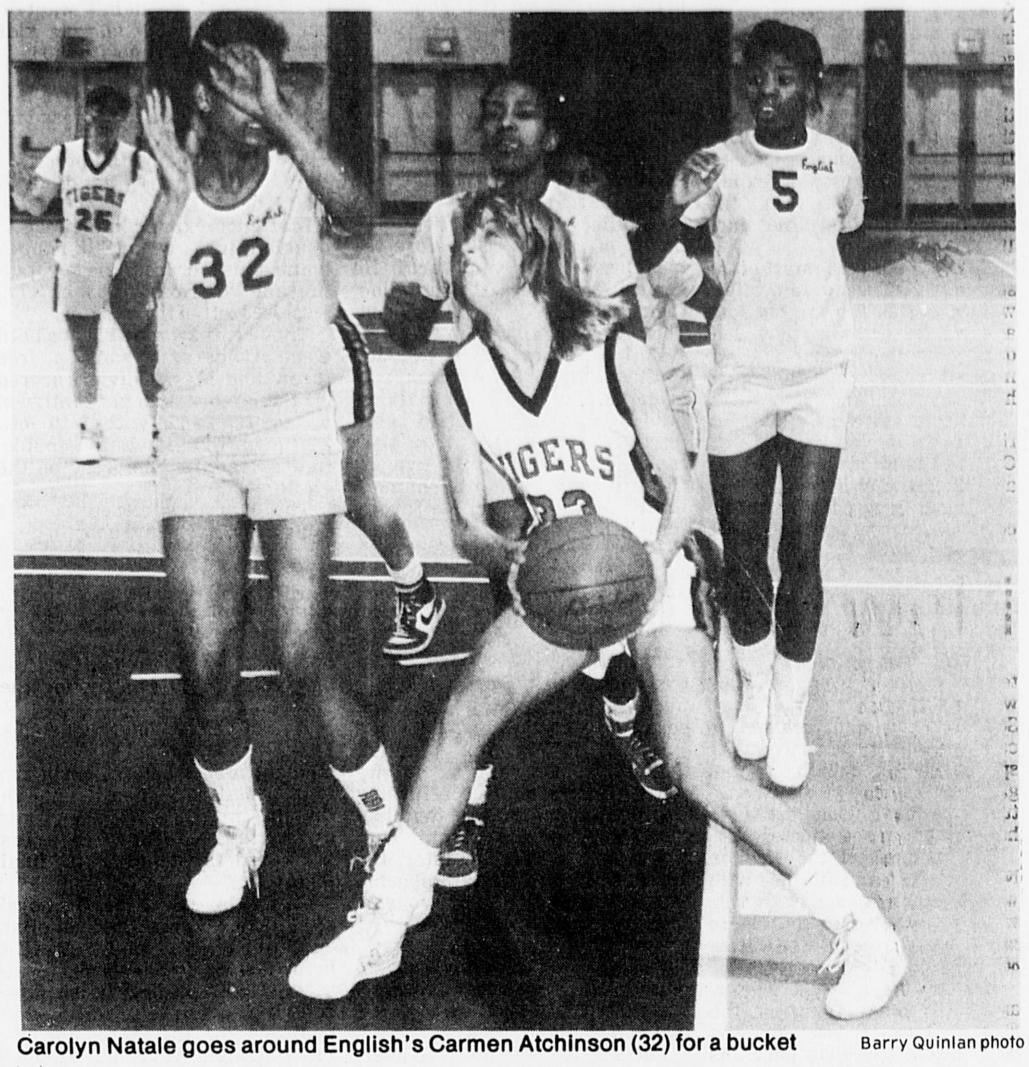

The Tigers were back in the red when Cardoza scored three free throws to put English up by three, 53-50 with 1:33 showing, but Rogers would have none of that. She hit a pair of foul shots herself to pull Newton to within one.

English went back up by three with a minute to go, but Rogers pulled North closer again with a baseline jumper to make it 55-54 with 50 seconds to go.

The teams traded hectic steals and Natale missed a pair of free throws before Newton's Ann Meng inbounded to Rogers in the paint, and with 24 seconds left, Rogers flicked a short jumper through the hoop for the final, 56-55, score.

Newton North had a slight three-point edge after one, 15-12, and an even slighter advantage at the half, 25-24. Ventura had 10 points in the first half to lead the Tigers.

English opened up a five-point lead in the third quarter, its biggest margin thus far, on a six-point scoring run made possible by two Cardoza hoops and an outside rocket from 6-0 freshman Carmen Atchinson. The Bulldogs looked like they would take the five-point edge into the half, but Natale slipped home an inside job at the buzzer to cut the lead to three, 42-39.

Frosh on boys' five assisted in victory

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

EASTON — Athletes train and prepare in mysterious ways. Anthing to get the edge.

The edge for the Newton North girl hoopsters was provided by 5-7 freshman Gary Carter, a forward on the school's 9th grade boys' team.

Carter, a quick and lanky athlete, played the role of English All-American Tonya Cardoza in practice late last week to prepare Carolyn Natale for her tough assignment in Saturday's Division I South Sectional Championship.

North played a box-and-one on Cardoza for three quarters Saturday, and the Tigers' strange training session paid off as they took a 56-55 championship victory home from Stonehill College.

"We didn't expect to use the box-and-one the whole time," Newton North coach Irene Cucina said. "We have a good 2-3 zone, but instead of using it, we kept the box on for three quarters."

Carter's input was simple; roam the key as Cardoza would, looking for the pass. Natale had the tough part; cut off the pass and shadow Carter-Cardoza. The final numbers tell just how effective it was. Cardoza, who averaged 27 points per game during the season and was held under 20 only once, scored just 22 points.

"He's real quick and it certainly helped," Cucina said of Carter's efforts.

The box-and-one had not stopped Cardoza in the past. The senior forward had seen just about every type of defense over the past four years.

"I've never seen anything she can't do," English coach Ernie Green said before the game. "She's seen it all. Box-and-one, triangle-and-two, double teams..."

The Newton Squirt A Black youth hockey team won all four of its Middlesex League games last month. Newton remains in a tie for first place with Woburn at 17-2.

Newton defeated Winchester, 9-3, Arlington, 6-1, Burlington 9-2, and Wilmington, 7-0. bill Kerrisey had eight goals and five assists during the stretch. He is the team's leading scorer with 90 points on 55 goals and 35 assists.

Steve Delaney set a torrid pace during the month with six goals and five assists in league play and nine more points during the state playdowns. Mike Sylvia contributed six goals and seven assists.

Jason Minaker and Jesse Lock each had eight points on four goals and four assists. Tony Rosenfeld tallied twice and had three assists. Jason Newberg had a goal and two assists. Mike Cucinotta, Mark Moore and Chris Demaio each added an assist.

Newton's defense had a strong month highlighted by the fine play oe Mark Leone, Richie Taylor, Cucinotta and Demaio. Newton's netminder, Doug MacGowen, missed two games with a broken finger but Lori Clark and Josh Krintzman filled in admirably.

In other action last month, Newton entered the state playdowns as the third-seeded team. Despite a flu bug which struck several members of the team, Newton beat Billerica 2, 5-4, in overtime.

Next, Newton walloped second-seeded Billerica 1, 6-1.

In the finals, Newton ran up against woburn and lost a 4-3 heartbreaker, despite taking a 3-2 lead into the third period.

In the three games, Delaney had six goals and Kerrisey four. Sylvia notched five point and Minaker four.

Holderness ousts Beaver

BOSTON — Some foul line sharpshooting by the Holderness School eliminated Beaver Country Day from the New England Prep School Class D quarterfinals, 42-37, at the Boston Garden on Wednesday. The contest was held as a preliminary to the Celtics-San Antonio matchup.

Holderness his nine of 10 free throws in the final quarter, and six of seven in the last three minutes of the game to seal the decision.

It took that kind of shooting, because the game was tied at the end of three. When Beaver's Steve Silverman hit a pair of free throws with three minutes to go, it was still knotted at 36-36.

Forward Dan Kenderson broke the tie with 2:20 to play on a pair of free throws.

The summary:

Marie Butera named Coach of Year

For the first time in the history of the Sons of Italy Sports Banquet, a woman was chosen "Coach of the Year."

Marie L. Butera of Newton, field hockey coach at Weston High School, was honored as "Coach of the Year" by the statewide organization at the 25th annual sports dinner held Saturday evening at Woburn Sons of Italy Lodge Home.

She was also the principal speaker at the dinner where 40 young men and women athletes of Italian-American heritage who excelled in sports were honored. The athletes came from New Hampshire and Maine as well as Massachusetts.

Coach Butera, who has a record of 14 undefeated seasons during her 29 years as head field hockey coach at Weston High, has led her teams to 320 victories, 47 losses and 30 ties.

In addition, for the past 24 years she has served as head lacrosse coach of the girl's team. She was head basketball coach for 19 years, girls' tennis coach and softball coach for five years.

In lacrosse, her teams scored 162 wins, 37 losses and 17 ties.

Since the formation of the Dual County League for girls in 1974, her teams were field hockey champions for eight consecutive seasons and runner-ups in the last four years.

At the time she started her career in 1956, she was the first varsity and junior varsity coach for all girls' sports.

The State Athletic Directors Board selected her as Massachusetts Coach of the Year in 1984.

Many of her former players have qualified for national teams and some have become collegiate and high school coaches. Three former players made the All-American team in field hockey, and two became members of the national team representing the United States internationally.

One player is in contention for a place on the next Olympic field hockey team. Two former players have played on the U.S. lacrosse team and gone on international tours.

One former player is an assistant field hockey coach at Harvard, another is a varsity lacrosse coach at Yale and assists in field hockey. Antoher former player is head of women's ice hockey and assists in lacrosse at Dartmouth.

In addition to the ceremonies honoring Butera, 40 Massachusetts athletes were honored for exceptional athletic achievements.

Included in that group were the following local athletes: Newton's Carol Ventura (soccer), Carolyn Natale (soccer) and Katrina Antonellis (basketball); Waltham's Scott Giusti (football) and Watertown's Dean Sacca (football).

Matignon spoils NC dream

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

READING — The Old West had its shootout at the O.K. Corral, but Thursday night at the Reading Memorial High School gym, the Northeast staged a pistol war of its own.

Newton Catholic's Jeff Sherman, the Catholic Suburban League's leading scorer, and Matignon's Ed Cirame, the Catholic Central 1 League's scoring champ, unloaded on the tournament world.

Sherman won the individual battle, squeezing off 37 points to Cirame's 29, but more importantly, Matignon knocked off the Newton Catholic Lancers, 72-50, in the Division 3 North Sectional semifinals.

Newton Catholic bows out of the tourney with a 19-4 record, the best team ever for Coach Don Dabenigno. The Lancers exceeded the coach's preseason expectations, qualifying for the tourney for the first time since 1970.

"We set goals at the start of the season," Dabenigno said. "We wanted to finish in the top four and we did and we wanted to qualify for the tourney and we made it to the semis. The guys had a super season."

Matignon advances to the sectional finals against Lynn Classical to be played Saturday at Wakefield High School.

Sherman caught fire in the second half, scoring seven points in the third frame and all but two of Newton Catholic's 18 points in the final period. Sherman's 37 points was one shy of tying his career best effort, a 38-point showing against Sacred Heart of Weymouth last year.

The 6-4 senior forward finishes the season with 510 points in 23 games.

While Sherman was red hot in the second half, scoring 23 points, Cirame's target practice in the early goings set the stage for the Matignon victory.

Cirame punched home 17 first-quarter points in vaulting Matignon to a 13-4 lead just three minutes into the contest. The 6-1 senior forward accounted for 11 of the Warrior's first 13 points.

"He's a real tough player," said Dabenigno.

Matignon coach Mike Lahiff had just as much praise for Newton's sharpshooter.

"Jeff's a heck of an all-around player," Lahiff said of Sherman. "He's done some really nice things for them."

Cirame scored the first five points of the contest before the bleachers were even warm. He struck first from the baseline, then five seconds later was converting a steal inside for two.

Following a second Newton Catholic turnover, Cirame was cruising toward the net and probably would have slipped home his third hoop if he had not been fouled before pulling the trigger. Cirame proved he was human, hitting only one of his free throws for a 5-0 lead.

Enter Cirame with eight straight Matignon points in an quick 8-4 run that would push the Warriors to a 15-6 lead with 4:53 left in the first quarter.

Matignon was running the fastbreak over the Newton Catholic press and, while Lahiff admitted to not wanting to get caught in a running game with the Lancers, his team handled it well.

"I think we set the tone," Lahiff said after the game. "We had scouted Newton Catholic and decided that we didn't want to run with them but our big kids proved they can run with the best of them."

Dabenigno smelled trouble when the early Lancer press failed.

"We had lived by the press but they (Matignon) handled it well," he said.

Matignon expanded the lead to double figures when Silk popped home a jumper from the key, putting the Warriors up by 11, 17-6, with 3:33 left in the quarter.

The teams swapped hoops until Gene Calderazzo sank a free throw and Mark Olivieri scored off the fastbreak to put Matignon up by 12, 24-12, with 1:20 left. Matignon would hold the double-figure lead for the rest of the game.

The Warriors closed out the quarter on a Cirame hoop to push the spread to 13, 28-15, then opened the second frame with a steal and a breakaway slam dunk.

The Lancers trailed by 14, 32-18, with 5:45 left in the half before an eight-point scoring run by Matignon put the contest out of reach. Calderazzo, a terror on the boards at 6-5, keyed the attack with four points in that spurt.

Newton, trailing now by 22 with 3:02 left, closed the half with its first scoring run, keyed by a pair of Sherman hoops. The Lancers had not combined for two hoops in a row until the dying moments of the second quarter when they scored five straight to pull within 17, 40-23.

The Lancers were without outside threat Frank Battista, vacationing in Florida, and Lahiff said the absence of the 5-9 junior guard made his job a lot easier.

"Believe me, I never expected to win like this," Lahiff said. "Don Dabenigno does a heck of a job and he's got some good players, but that kid missing really hurt them."

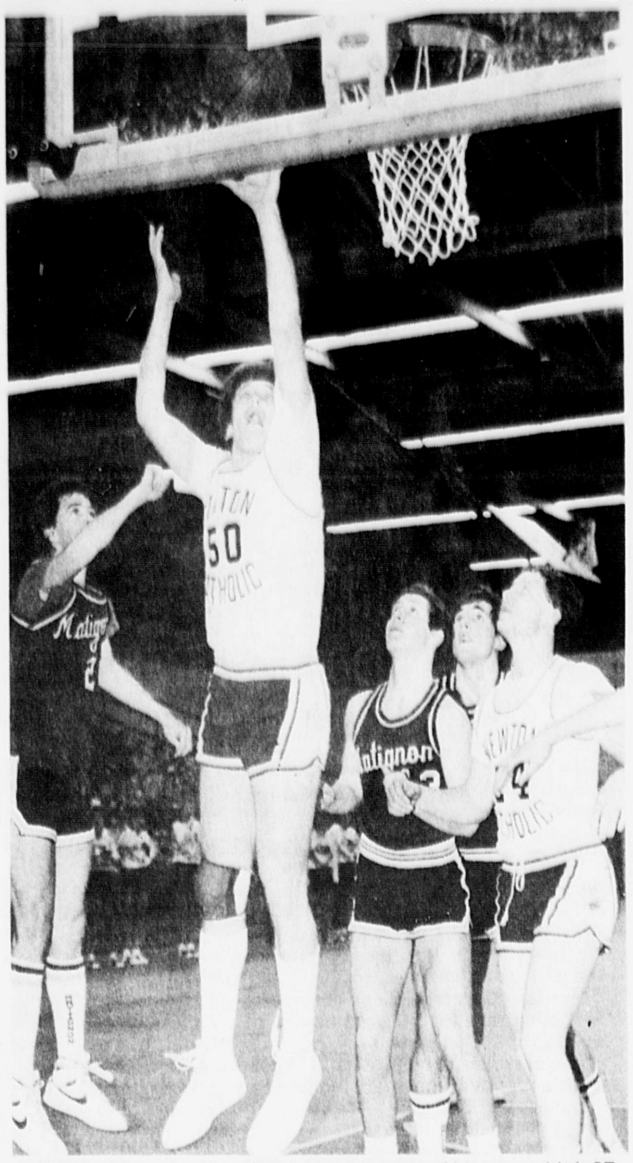

The summary:

MATIGNON(72)-Cardello 2-0-4, Silk 2-0-4, Onorato 1-0-2, Lahiff 2-0-4, Olivieri 2-0-4, Cirame 14-1-29, Devereaux 1-0-2, Calderazzo 8-2-18, Clifford 1-0-2, Simmons 0-1-1, Collins 1-0-2. Tot. 34-4-72.

Newton North athletes honored

With eight of its 11 sports teams finishing over .500 this winter, Newton North High School again had reason to celebrate. At its annual winter sports banquet, the Tiger clan gathered Tuesday at the Nonantum American Legion Post 440 to honor its teams and athletes.

Last fall, all of the Newton North sports teams finished with winning records, and with this winter's success rate, the Tigers have been a powerhouse in 1985-86.

Heading the list this winter, and still going strong in the Eastern Mass. Tournament, the lady hoopsters lost only once this season in capturing the Suburban League title for the first time since 1974.

Coach Irene Cucina and her Tiger cagers will battle Dennis-Yarmouth tonight (Massasoit Comm. College in Brockton, 8 p.m.) in the Division I South Sectional semifinals, and with a victory would advance to the sectional finals on Saturday.

"We're going a lot further than we ever thought we would," Cucina said Tuesday after dinner.

When the season started, Cucina, in her first as varsity coach, had only three returning starters and was forced to field a mostly inexperienced team.

A month and a half later, the Tiger girls have a championship season behind them and two tournament wins to their credit.

Newton North's hockey team, also under a first-year coach, qualified for the state tourney, only to draw number-two seed and undefeated Natick.

The Tigers went down in overtime, but not without a fight.

"We won as a team and we lost as a team," said rookie coach Jack Heavey.

The Tigers started the season in bad shape, losing the season-opener, 11-0, but went on to win nine of its next 11 games. Heavey's skaters were the only Suburban League team to beat cross-town rival Waltham twice, and the Tigers were also the first league team to qualify for the states.

Coach Chris Jones and the Tiger swimmers won seven straight meets before losing the final two. A Suburban League title was in store for the Tiger swimmers before injuries weakened the team in its final thrust.

Under Dave Simkins, the boys' gymnastics team had similar success, winning eight straight before losing to top-seeded Burlington High. The boys finished second in the league to Milton and qualified for the states for the third straight year, all in completing its best season in 10 years.

Newton North's boys' indoor track team exceeded its preseason expectations, finishing third in the league, third in the Eastern Mass. Class A Championships, and fourth in the State Championship.

Under coach Hank Van Putten, the Tigers set five school records.

The girls' track team, coached by Mary Jane Williams, met with similar success in finishing second in the league.

Megan Ross coached the girl gymnasts to a 6-5 season. The Tigers were 6-1 through seven meets but met with some stiff competition down the stretch.

Skiing coach Jan Perkins and her boys' and girls' crew didn't have the cooperation of Mother Nature, competing in only six of the 10 scheduled meets, but managed to place three of its four teams in the states. Both cross country teams and the girls' slalom team qualified.

Jerry Phillips' boy hoopsters finished two games under .500 in battling teams such as Brockton and Cambridge Rindge & Latin twice each.

Steve Parker's wrestlers got off to a slow start but steadily improved and the second-year coach said better things can be expected next season.

Eight athletes were presented plaques for their compiling five or more varsity letters. They were: Eric Cosentino (soccer, indoor track, spring track), David Gates (football, indoor track, spring track), Diana Goldstein (volleyball, indoor track, spring track), Ed O'Brien (baseball, basketball, soccer), Jonathan Greenberg (soccer, indoor track, spring track), James Kreider (cross country, indoor track, spring track), Timothy Weaver (golf, hockey), Robert Wellenstein (cross country, indoor track, spring track).

Mishkan Tefila quintet still perfect

BROOKLINE — Though missing several starters, and having to do without top scorer Todd Groman for much of the game because of foul trouble, Mishkan Tefila struggled to its 14th win without a defeat on Sunday, downing Temple Emeth, 50-40, in United Synagogue Youth Basketball League action at the Brimmer and May gym.

This one was closer than the 10-point final difference, as the margin was still only four in the closing minutes of the game.

Balanced scoring helped Mishkan Tefila make up for the missing players. Seven players scored in the third period and all eight got on the board in the fourth.

Craig Albert was the key in the second half, scoring six of his eight in the latter stages of the third quarter and early in the fourth.

Mishkan Tefila had a five-point lead at the break, as Andrew Harmon and John Aronie each scored six. Both Kevin and Todd Groman were in foul trouble early.

In Mishkan Tefila's previous game, Dick Rubin scored 16 points and Todd Groman added 15 for a 58-45 win over Needham.

Needham dropped its second game of the season (both to Mishkan Tefila) against 10 wins.

Both teams were missing a couple of starters due to vacations, and it showed in the number of turnovers.

The Cougars might have blown the game open in the first period but Needham's Eric Kaplan scored six of his 14 points to keep it a three-point game.

Mishkan Tefila took charge in the second as Rubin scored six and Groman five, leading their club to an 11-point bulge at the half.

Groman scored eight more in the third quarter as the winners went into the final period with a 15-point lead.

Mishkan Tefila plays Sharon on Sunday at 7 p.m. at Brimmer and May in the final game of the regular season.

More than magic at Disneyland

Local girl wins a Firebird

NEWTON — Twelve-year-old Beth Ann D'Agostino walked through the gates of Disneyland last month with the average child's expectation, but all of that changed when the bells went off.

The Newton girl had won a $12,000 Pontiac Firebird.

Mickey Mouse presented Beth Ann the keys to her brand new car, but with all the excitement — and envious onlookers — Beth Ann said she didn't have time to absorb the reality of her prize.

"I was excited, but my mom was the one jumping up and down," Beth Ann said. "I couldn't believe it."

Beth Ann's cousin and sister were mad at her stroke of luck, she said. Her cousin walked through the gates just before she did, and her sister immediately afterward, but each of them won only a souvenir pin.

"I won a popsicle, her sister and father won pins, and Beth Ann walks away with a car," Beth Ann's mother, Betsy D'Agostino, said.

What will a 12-year-old do with a car? Well, there is no doubt in the mind of this seventh grader from Day Junior High School.

"I'm going to keep it. I guess I'll let my mom and dad drive it until I'm old enough to drive," Beth Ann said.

Betsy D'Agostino said the family discussed whether to keep or sell the car, but Beth Ann did not want to part with her prize.

"Once we get the car, we're going to sell one of our other cars because this family doesn't need three cars," Betsy D'Agostino said. "I'm not so sure winning this car was such a bargain," she added, laughing. "The prize doesn't include all the expenses that go along with a car, like insurance and taxes."

Within the next month, Beth Ann must go to the nearest General Motors car dealership to select the color of her new car and to choose the options.

"I definitely want a red car with a black interior," Beth Ann said.

Feb. 18 was Beth Ann's lucky day. She spent it sitting in the display Firebird for the media to take pictures.

"All the photographers were asking her to sit up so they could see her because she was so small," Betsy D'Agostino said. "I think it was all a little overwhelming for her at the time because of the crowd surrounding her, but she's very excited."

Disneyland is giving a free Firebird away every day through May 31 as part of Dineyland's 30-year anniversary celebration.

Risks of IRA investments

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

NEVILLE D. FRANKEL

Dear Mr. Frankel:

I am in my early 20s. Together, my wife and I earn $50,000 annually. My question has to do with IRA investments. Should we be opening IRAs with our bank and investing in certificates that pay interest, or should we be investing in stock and mutual funds?

C.D. Boston

Dear C.D.:

The most appropriate investment for any individual is determined by the nature of his or her circumstances. In the final analysis, however, people select their investments based upon the risks they are willing to live with.

There are two basic risks. The first is the risk of loss of purchasing power. You run this risk when you invest in fixed income securities (certificates of deposit, bonds, etc.) that may have a limited real return. For example, if you buy a bond yielding 8 percent, and if inflation is at 4½ percent, your real return is 3½ percent. The attraction of fixed income securities is that they ensure the return of your principal.

When you buy equity investments, stocks and mutual funds, you choose the second risk — the risk of loss of principal. The attraction of these investments is that, wisely selected, they will probably out-perform fixed income investments over the long term. The risk is that while you participate in increased prices, you also share in losses.

People approaching retirement need to know how much money they have available, and can generally not afford to choose the risk of loss of principal. By default, therefore, they run the risk of lost purchasing power.

Younger people, however, have longer to invest and they also have the opportunity to reinvest with current income should an investment turn sour. They can afford, and should generally take, the risk of loss of principal.

My recommendation would be to invest in a carefully selected growth mutual fund that has performed well over successive five-year periods. If you prefer not to make the decision on your own and use the advice of professionals, turn to your investment advisor or financial planner for assistance.

Author immortalizes exiled White Russians living in Maine town

By Jerry Harkavy
Associated Press Writer

RICHMOND, Maine (AP) — Since moving to Maine 20 years ago Willis Johnson has been captivated by the colony of White Russian exiles who settled in this faded town on the Kennebec River.

Many residents had lived through the upheavals of the Bolshevik Revolution and had survived the rigors that followed: Stalin's gulag; post-World II Displaced Persons camps; life as political refugees in such places as New York, South America and China.

Still nurturing dreams of czarist restoration, the refugees came to Richmond in the 1950s, built three churches and transformed the town into an outpost of Russian culture. At its height, the colony had as many as 500 families but death has reduced the settlement's population to perhaps 200 people in all.

Although the Russian presence in Richmond seems destined to become little more than a memory, Johnson has immortalized both the place and its people in his critically-acclaimed first book of fiction, "The Girl Who Would Be Russian and Other Stories (Harcourt Brace Jovanovich, $15.95).

Johnson, a former Associated Press reporter, acknowledges that like the girl in the title story, he was attracted to the Russians and fascinated by them.

"It's the attraction to the exotic," he explained. "It's exaggerated in her, but her attraction was to some degree my attraction."

His characters make unlikely heroes — most are old and poor — but Johnson recognized the momentos events they had witnessed and the suffering they had endured. Uprooted from their beloved motherland, they were destined to die on foreign soil unassimilated into an alien culture.

"The lives they had lived were probably beyond the imagination of most of the Maine people living there," he said. "And finally, drifting into this little riverside town in Maine. And here, this is the end, this is the last spot," said Johnson, who still marvels at the improbabilities of history that brought the Russians here.

Johnson drove to Richmond each weekend, eating stroganoff or pirozhki in the small Russian restaurant, visiting the churches, and getting to know the people. He and his wife, Christine, eventually made friends with some of the refugees and exchanged visits to their homes.

He became a charter member of Maine's Slavophile Society, holding dances and bringing in eastern European musicians from out-of-state. Like two of the non-Russian characters in his stories, he leaned to play the balalaika, the stringed instrument whose melancholy tones evoke rural Russia.

"I wasn't thinking of writing a book. I was just having a good time being among these people," he recalled.

As a journalist, Johnson had written several news features about Richmond's Russians. He observed that his newspaper and magazine pieces never seemed to capture the essential truths that made the expatriates' lives so fascinating to him.

"The way to really tell about their lives was in fiction," he concluded. He began to write short stories in which he created his own characters. This enabled him to capture the Russians' prejudices and suspicions while imbuing them with a nobility of spirit. He changed the village name from Richmond to the fictitious Plankton, but retained local landmarks and geography.

Johnson's compassion and understanding are evident in his gentle, often humorous treatment of the book's most memorable characters. Among them are Father Vladimir, the priest who dreams of making the town rich by netting roe-laden sturgeon in the Kennebec to sell as caviar; the ballerina Valentinova, whose mind spins with visions of the London or St. Petersburg stage as she performs her annual Christmas recital in a wood-stove heated Methodist hall; and Gregor Smolnov, who is still haunted by memories of the Bolshevik goons who murdered his family.

The head of the colony, Maxim Maximovich, is the conniving real estate operator whose newspaper ads lure the Russians to Plankton with promises of green forests and snowy winters just like those in the old country. But even half a world from their native land, the characters remain prisoners of their past, nursing their grievances and wallowing in their sorrows.

Better late.

MISSOULA, Mont. (AP) — Gerald Bostwick was in his 20s when he asked his teenage sweetheart to marry him in 1928. It took 58 years to get his wish.

Bostwick, 84, a retired contractor and truck driver from Dillon, and Katherine Grube Arthun, 80, walked down the aisle Friday.

The first time he proposed, Bostwick was turned down.

"I just wasn't ready to get married in 1928," said Arthun.

GREAT WOODS AT SUDBURY

The first thing you'll notice when you drive into Great Woods is the wonderful silence and the great towering trees. The pines are especially majestic where they line the wide winding roadways. If you're here at just the right time, you might even see a flock of Canada geese coming in for a landing on Willis Lake. A serene and beautiful watersite of approximately 96 acres.

THE KENSINGTON $589,900

Winter is especially pretty here. Nothing quite matches the thrill of seeing the first snow of the year settle itself along the branches of the great trees. This is when you'll probably see a cardinal or two - a sudden flash of red against the soft white snow.

THE NORMANDY $595,000

Great Woods in Sudbury, Massachusetts is one of the few really serene places left in the West of Boston suburbs. All homes here will be 3,000 to 4,000 square feet on one to three acre lots. They will be finished to your own special needs and desires including sodded lawns and central air conditioning.

THE SHANNON $525,000

PERSONAL TREATMENT. PROFESSIONAL CARE.

At Newton-Wellesley Hospital, we believe in – and utilize fully – all the advanced medical technology available today. And to that, we add what we believe is also a critical component of superior health care. It's a simple matter of treating people as individuals, of remembering what the word care really means. So while we're proud to employ sophisticated technology, we're even prouder to employ sensitive people. And right now, we're looking for more of them in the following areas:

File Assistants

If you are seeking an entry level position in a health care setting, we have several file assistant positions available. Positions are currently open in our Radiology, Patient Accounts and Medical Records Departments. Positions are also available on a variety of shifts including full-time days, part-time days and part-time evenings. Qualified applicants must be knowledgeable of alpha and numeric filing systems.

Admitting Coordinator

We have a temporary full-time opening in our Admitting Department for a Coordinator. This position requires lots of people contact and the ability to interface sensitively with patients. Good typing skills are also required. This is an opportunity to gain experience in the admitting field while being at the center of hospital activity.

Central Supply Technicians

We are seeking individuals with an interest in hospital sterile supply for full-time and part-time CSR technician weekend positions. Applicants must be detail-oriented and possess an awareness of hospital safety standards. Experience is required for the part-time position.

Nursing Assistants

We are seeking experienced nursing assistants to fill full-time, part-time and on-call positions on a variety of units including: maternity and medical/surgical. Qualified applicants will have the opportunity to support the activity on primary care nursing units, to work with other health support technicians and participate in on-going staff development programs. Applicants must have completed a nursing assistant certificate program and/or have 6 months' previous experience in a hospital or level I or II nursing home.

Patient Accounts

Are you looking for a part-time or full-time position that will offer future growth potential? Do you have some clerical or educational background to build on? Our patient accounts department is expanding and is in need of dependable individuals who will make a commitment to a team effort. You will develop your skills by learning effective patient communications, third party billing and CRT operation. Interested applicants must have good interpersonal skills, light typing and filing abilities. Positions are available on both the day and evening shifts.

We offer a competitive salary and a full range of benefits including Earned Time, dental insurance and free parking. NWH is a 350-bed teaching hospital located near the Woodland MBTA station on the Riverside Line. Newton-Wellesley Hospital, 2014 Washington Street, Newton, MA 02162.

Emma Francis Gill

Was proof reader with News Tribune

NEWTONVILLE — The funeral of Emma Francis Gill of Newtonville was held from the Martin E. Conroy and Son Funeral Home, 439 Washington St., Newton, Saturday, followed by a funeral mass at Our Lady's Church.

Miss Gill died Wednesday at the Wellesley Manor Nursing Home in Wellesley.

Born in Waltham, she attended Waltham public schools and was a graduate of Waltham High School.

A resident of Newtonville for many years, Miss Gill had been a proof reader with the News Tribune for 57 years and was a member of the International Typographical Union, Local 13.

An associate of Miss Gill's during most of her long career at the News Tribune, Senior Editor Thomas J. Murphy, recalled her dedication as the principal proof reader.

"Emma Gill," he said, "had a great love for the written word. Her knowledge of spelling, punctuation and grammar was uncanny. Although the small office space she occupied was part of the composing room operation, we of the editorial department considered her our strongest ally. Hardly a day's production went by without her suggesting an improvement here or there.

"Our reporters and editors had good reason to be grateful for the help she gave in such a friendly way."

Emma Gill

Miss Gill also was a member of Our Lady Help of Christians Church, Newton and had attended meetings at The Cenacle in Brighton for many years.

The daughter of the late, Peter B. and Mary (Barnard) Gill, she leaves her sister, Katherine L. Prendergast; her nieces and her nephew, Virginia Gill DeLorey, Suzanne Gill Schwartz and Grattan Gill and 10 grand nieces and nephews.

Mrs. Martin died suddenly last Wednesday in Newton-Wellesley Hospital.

A resident of Newton for 35 years, she had been employed for 20 years in the Waltham office of the N. E. Telephone Co.

The wife of the late, James J. Martin Sr., she leaves her children, James J. Jr., Brian W., Mark V. and Joanne C. Martin, all of Newtonville; her sisters and her brothers, Cecelia and James F. Schultz, both of Newtonville, Edward Schultz of Woburn, Margaret O'Connor of Braintree and George R. Schultz of Leewood, Kansas; also survived by several nieces and nephews.

Vol. 116, No. 12 — Since 1872 — Newton, Massachusetts — Wednesday, March 19 1986

Building ban approved

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — There will be a temporary ban on commercial and industrial construction in the Garden City. Monday night, nearly 100 residents cheered loudly as the Board of Aldermen voted 20 to 3 to pass the moratorium petition.

The vote came after more than one year of debate and wrangling over whether or not the city needed a building ban and if so, how it would affect the city's tax base. A non-binding public opinion question on the November ballot showed that residents favored a ban by more than 2-1. It was apparent from the margin of victory, which surprised many moratorium proponents, that the aldermen were more concerned about increased development than decreased tax revenues.

As of today, no building permits will be issued in Newton for any commercial, industrial or business construction that could be built without aldermanic review . The ban will last a maximum of one year, or until changes in the zoning laws now being debated by the aldermanic Zoning Amendment Committee (ZAC) are enacted.

Moratorium proponents pointed to an office building being constructed at 29 Crafts St. by developer Michael Iodice of Chatham Realty as one example of why Newton needs more control over as-of-right construction. The Iodice building is being constructed in an industrial zone. Under city zoning laws prior to Monday night's decision, Iodice was allowed to build up to six stories of any type construction without aldermanic approval. Many area residents complained that the building was too intense for their residential neighborhood. Several attempts to block construction of the building failed because it was an as-of-right construction, something the new law temporarily prohibits.

"Some communities in this city have already been lost to commercial development," Alderman Bruce Carmichael said. "We have to do something to save the rest of the city from what has happened in Newton Corner and Newtonville."

Proponents on the board added the moratorium is needed because Newton is an attractive city to build in due to its proximity to Boston and mass transportation.

"This is one of the most important votes this board will ever take," Alderman Rodney Barker said. "Newton is a very desirable location and we must do something to protect the residential character that the people who live here want."

As proof of their argument, Barker and others spoke of the Village Study, where preliminary reports have been showing that increased development is likely throughout the city.

Fighting back

By Les Orsini, Staff Writer

NEWTON — This Canadian immigrant is an example of the American Dream come true. But Acacia Avenue resident Shirley Jaffe also finds herself living an American nightmare.

To Jaffe, the nightmare is the city's bureaucracy that prosecuted her and husband Leon for allegedly operating a two-family house in a single-family zone and the courts that fined her $12,000.

True to the American spirit, this feisty, self-made woman — who estimates her personal worth at between $1 and $2 million — is fighting back.

> 'I'm not on a vendetta to hurt people. What I'm after is an equalization of the laws.'
> Shirley Jaffe

The Jaffes have appealed their conviction for criminal zoning violations, and the state's Supreme Judicial Court (SJC) is now reviewing the case.

In addition, Shirley Jaffe has swamped the city's Building Department with more than 310 complaints of alleged illegal apartments and building code complaints.

Jaffe has become something of a zoning sleuth. By comparing Assessing Department to Building Department records, she discovers homes that have more apartments than city zoning allows.

Her goal is to show that the Garden City is speckled with hundreds of illegal dwellings and that officials have unfairly selected her for prosecution.

"They were living in the darkness," says Jaffe of the apartments. "I've brought them out into the light."

Many of those illegal dwellings violate the state building code requirment of two

Chief's property violates zoning

By Les Orsini, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Police Chief William F. Quinn will be ordered to remove one apartment from a house he owns because it allegedly violates the city's zoning laws, according to Building Inspector Daniel Gentile.

The Building Department will mail a letter to the chief ordering him to remove one of the three apartments in the 1900 Washington St. premises, Gentile said.

To effect that change, Quinn will be told to remove one of the building's three kitchens, Gentile said.

Quinn has contended the building — which is in a single-family zone — was originally built for three families in 1914, thereby "grandfathering" it from the city's 1932 zoning ordinances.

But Building Department records show that plumbing permits in 1914 and 1922 and an application to alter the building after a 1934 fire all say the building is designed for two families.

This apparently means the house is grandfathered for two and not three units.

Around two weeks ago, Building Inspector Robert Columbus investigated the premises and later filed his report with Building Commissioner James W. Cameron.

"What he found was what was expected," said Gentile of Columbus. "He found three apartments, one on each floor, when the record shows two."

Transcript Newspapers sold to Harte-Hanks

An agreement in principle has been reached between Transcript Newspapers Inc., which includes the Newton Graphic, and Harte-Hanks Communications to purchase Transcript Newspapers.

According to Bob Marbut, president and chief executive officer and Larry Franklin, executive vice president and chief operating officer, of Harte-Hanks, an April closing is expected.

In this area, the corporation operates the Middlesex News and the Wayland-Weston Town Crier and the Wellesley Townsman.

In a series of trades and related transactions expected to close in April, Harte-Hanks acquired the The Newton Graphic, The News-Tribune, The Daily Transcript, The Parkway and West Roxbury Transcripts, The Needham Chronicle, The Family Shopper and Trib-Plus from Garden State Newspapers Inc.

Commenting on the pending sale, Transcript Newspapers Publisher Paul Massey said, "I think that, in this case, I don't look at it as a sale but as a pooling of resources. From our point of view, I feel very positive about the acquisition."

The San Antonio-based communications company currently owns and operates 26 daily newspapers and 90 non-daily publications nationwide.

Zero citizen interest in school budget

NEWTON — Not one citizen appeared at a public hearing Monday night to address the School Committee on the $46.4 million proposed budget for fiscal 1987.

Administrators scheduled the hearing to give the public one last chance to discuss the budget before the school committee's final vote March 24. The hearing lasted less than five minutes.

Last week the School Committee cast a straw vote on the budget, adding and deleting the costs of several items. A cut in the ranks of guidance counsellors, which the committee had contemplated, was rejected, putting approximately $77,000 back into the budget.

The action resulted in a $12,447 increase over Superintendent Dr. John Strand's fiscal 1987 budget recommendation.

The proposed budget represents at least a 5.5 percent increase over the current budget, which translates into at least $2.4 million jump.

Drug testing latest hurdle for police bargaining team

By Howard Altman, Staff Writer

NEWTON — Drug testing is one of the issues holding up settlement of the 20-month-old labor dispute between the city and police, according to a source on the Newton Police Association (NPA) bargaining team.

Last week, talks between the city and the NPA broke down after more than 10 hours of negotiations. The source says the city requested drug testing during the lastest round of negotiations, adding that Newton police would be the first force in the commonwealth to be subjected to drug testing.

The source, who wishes to remain anonymous, says police do not object to testing officers "for good and justifiable causes, as long as the option of rehabilitation remains open for first offenders. If someone gets caught twice, then he's gone if that's what management wants."

The problem, the source says, is that the city insisted on reserving the right to "take each offender on a case-by-case basis without any guarantee that an officer would be offered rehabilitation as an alternative to dismissal."

In addition, the source says the city would like to test any officer coming up for a promotion, something the NPA bargaining team "strongly objects to."

"We feel 100 percent confident that there is no drug problem on the force," the source says, "but it is something that is cropping up throughout society and we don't mind testing. We just want to make sure that a first-time offender has the option of seeking help and the city would not agree to any language specifics that would ensure that."

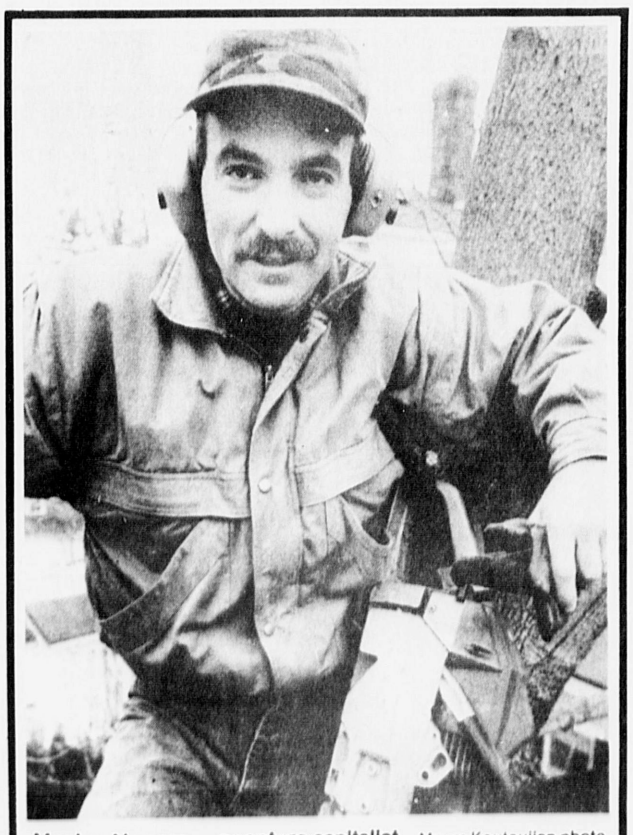

In addition, the source says police asked that any officer whose urinalysis tested positive for drugs be given a two-year probation period consisting of spot drug tests and any departmental transfer management requests. City officials, the source says, did not agree to that, insisting instead that any officer testing positive be subject to spot tests "for the rest of his career."

Chief Administrative Officer Richard Kelliher would neither confirm nor deny that the city has requested drug testing, saying only that "we expect to be working on economic and language issues. There are a variety of issues discussed at the table and the city has consistently taken the position not to depart from the wage pattern unless improvements are made in the language aspects of the contract, which are open for negotiation."

Drug testing was just part of the reason negotiations broke down the source says. The city and the union are "just half a percentage point away from agreeing on the money, but they keep coming in and asking for changes."

The source says there is only a "$130 per man, per year difference" in what the city is offering and what police are asking for, but everytime a compromise is reached "the city [illegible] for something else."

The wage dispute, according to the source, centers on the last year of the four-year package where police are asking for a 6 percent raise and the city is offering a 5.5 percent raise.

Tree cutter, inventor hopes to feed world

By Jeff Peterson, In Focus Editor

NEWTON — With a little luck, engineer-cum-entrepeneur Moshe Alamaro could be well on his way to becoming a billionaire businessman in two years.

Or he still could be cutting trees for a living, trying to convince venture capitalists to invest in a technology he believes could solve chronic food shortages in the Third World.

"The problem with venture capitalists is they have difficulties grasping the scope of this," he says with a heavy accent. "I'm talking about something really big. It could be billions and billions of dollars."

Alamaro, a 37-year-old Isreali aeronautical engineer, has revived an existing technology for producing nitrogen fertilizer which he claims is perfectly suited to the needs of developing countries.

The process, perfected at the turn of the century by two Norwegian physicists, creates nitrates by passing an electric arc through air in a plasma arc reactor. All that is needed is air, water, low-grade limestone and electric power — abundant in many Third World countries during their developmental stages separate egresses, she says. The second exit is needed as an escape in case of fire.

The 44-year-old woman has created, in effect, a nightmare for an already understaffed Building Department and for landlords whose properties are coming under scrutiny they had not previously received.

"I'm not on a vendetta to hurt people," Jaffe says. "What I'm after is to have an equalization of the laws."

But like the ink used to take her fingerprints when criminal charges were brought, the case has left its dark stain on Jaffe.

"I'm a criminal whether I like it or not. I've been arraigned. I've been sentenced," says Jaffe. "It's degrading."

She steadfastly denies ever converting 58 Winthrop St. from a single-family to a two-family home and she professes to be unaware of why the city pressed criminal charges against her if so many other dwellings violate zoning laws.

The dispute over 58 Winthrop St. began in the late summer of 1984 when West Newton neighbors claimed she was running a "boarding house."

One resident recently described the backyard there as "an absolute disgrace" where a half-dozen cars, a canoe and two doghouses are "squeezed onto a postage-stamp piece of property."

Jaffe disputes those charges. Each of her tenants has signed a lease, none are transients, she says.

Only three of the cars park in the yard, where they take up roughly 30 percent of the space, she estimates. "It's not any kind of a postage-stamp lot," Jaffe says. "It's a good-sized backyard."

A key issue to her conflict with the city and residents is her policy of renting homes to single, unrelated people, she says. They form communal groups that share chores, the cost of utilties and occasionally meals, she says.

In all of her singles groups, there has never been more than one person per bedroom, Jaffe says.

Most singles would have difficulty finding a home if it were not for the kind of arrangement she offers, Jaffe says.

Her average rent is $300 a month, she says. Realty agents have told her studio apartments average about $550 and one-bedroom apartments average about $700 each month, she says.

Rather than close down the illegal apartments she has discovered, Jaffe says it is time for the city to accept them as one solution to the housing shortage facing singles.

With its current $5 million budget surplus, the city could offer low-interest loans to landlords for upgrading apartments to satisfy code requirements, she says.

Jaffe's crusade also has touched the Board of Aldermen and Mayor Theodore D. Mann.

Aldermen have formed the Zoning Amendment Committee to review the city's zoning, including ordinances applying to illegal apartments.

At his most recent press conference, Mann said he is most concerned about the safety of such apartments and possible "rent gouging."

Jaffe, without a doubt the most controversial landowner in Newton, is also one of the newest.

Born Shirley Mailman on a Nova Scotia farm, Jaffe and her first husband, Andrew Snooks, came to Boston from Ontario in the early 1960s. "We felt there was more opportunity," she said of America.

After finding work, the couple "saved pennies" for the $3,000 down payment on a $15,000 home in Billerica, "the only place we could afford," said Jaffe.

She personally refurbished the attic, laying down floors, putting up a ceiling. Six months later, the couple sold the home for $20,500, Jaffe says. "That was a lot of money in those days," she says.

The couple moved to a worn-down, two-family Victorian home in Bedford, which she refurbished. She purchased two more homes there after selling the first for a $10,000 profit, she says.

She formed her first singles group of five tenants in Bedford. When her marriage broke up, she took part in a group of seven so she could afford the mortgage on her first Arlington property, Jaffe says.

Through remortgaging, she gradually purchased six more Arlington homes in the early 1970s, Jaffe says. In between, she began working for Leon Jaffe, owner of Northeastern Communications Corp. in Waltham, and would later marry him.

In 1983, the Jaffes moved to Newton and Shirley Jaffe sold her Arlington properties at an estimated $200,000 profit so she could purchase some of Newton's old, stately Victorian homes.

But profit is not her only or even her prime motive, she professes.

The houses she owned in Arlington lacked "architectural charm," she says. "Newton has charming houses. It's the Victorian I go for."

Jaffe says she has spent large sums of money refurbishing her Newton properties — $75,000 on 337 Central St. and $50,000 on Winthrop Street, for example.

"I love houses," Jaffe says. "To love a piece of real estate sounds crazy, but they're almost like children. The finished product is me."

Kids push police, fire pacts

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann met behind closed doors Monday for more than two and a half hours with six people who urged him to settle the contract impasse with the city's police and firefighters by giving them the raises they are asking for.

The situation remains unresolved, so Monday's session was like previous bargaining sessions in many ways.

The big difference was that the six persons were seventh graders from the F.A. Day Junior High School.

After almost two years of negotiating, and still no agreement on a contract, a handful of students decided to see if they could take things into their own hands. Monday they presented Mann with a letter and a petition signed by 407 students of the school. The letter read:

"Dear Mayor Mann, Due to recent occurrences, we students have become aware of the fact that the police and fire personnel are receiving the average of $23,000 per year. Even though a 5 percent pay increase has been offered, this is inadequate for they risk their lives every day and must live in Newton with the skyrocketing cost of living here.

"Seeing as the city has an $8.5 million surplus, we feel the city has the money for the raise. We ask of you to please give the police and fire an appropriate pay increase."

This bit of student activism was the brainchild of 13-year-old Lorig Charkoudian, who said she decided to get involved after seeing police officers and firefighters picket at Newton Corner a couple weeks ago. She said her motive for the involvement is her fondness for politics.

"I worked to keep Bigelow Junior High open and had lots of fun," she said.

Charkoudian said her interest in politics may have been passed to her by her father, who was a former state official working in Springfield and once served as a campaign manager for former Sen. Edward Brooke.

After the Newton Corner picket, Lorig began scheming with her friend, 12-year-old Karen Ross, to stage a student walkout last week from Day Junior High in support of the police and firefighters.

But word of the walkout reached the school's principal, Edwin Fraktman, who nipped it in the bud. Instead, he arranged for Monday's meeting with the mayor. Fraktman also allowed the students to get out of school a little early so they could march up Lowell Avenue to City Hall, carrying signs that read, "Honk, if you support police and fire." Screams of glee were heard every time a passing car honked.

Also taking part in Monday's meeting were 13-year-old V.J. Farina, 12-year-old Heather Quinn, 12-year-old Liz Munroe and 12-year-old Anna Rosenblum.

All of them take a decidely pro-police and fire position. Two of them have relatives who are affected directly — Farina's uncle, Skip Hill, is a Newton police officer, and Quinn's uncle, Robert Barbato, is a Newton firefighter. But Farina, whose father has also been quite active in statewide political campaigns, and the rest of the children all seemed earnest and convinced they were taking a fair stand on what is a fairness issue, although the mayor would say it is also a business issue.

They also enjoyed getting out of school a few minutes early and receiving a police cruiser escort to ensure their safe crossing of the streets.

They plotted their strategy as they walked toward City Hall, saying things like, "If someone coughs, that means to shut up because they're not making the right point." They were a little nervous as they approached the mayor's office, one of them voicing fear over the possibility of being arrested "because we're underage."

After their meeting, which ended shortly before 6 p.m., a somewhat tired-looking Mann said, "I can only compliment the Newton schools for the caliber of kids they turn out." He called them "well-versed" and "articulate," and told them, "It's better that we did this than if we didn't."

The kids complained afterward that Mann didn't give them enough air time during the meeting. They said he told them he did not meet with them to negotiate, but to provide them with information. Although they were grateful he took the time to see them, they seemed genuinely irritated that he wouldn't accept their suggestion of a 7 percent pay hike for the police and firefighters' unions.

Trying their hand at contract negotiations were Farina, Anna Rosenblum, and (standing) Lorig (top) Liz Munroe, (seated) Karen Ross, V.J. Charkoudian. Art Illman photo

Mann said the next negotiating meeting between the two sides is scheduled March 26. Asked about the chances of coming to an agreement then, he said, "Ask me on the 27th." Meanwhile, the unions are planning another picket at Newton Corner Thursday afternoon.

Unfair labor practice charged in schools

NEWTON — Teachers of learning disabled (LD) students have filed an unfair labor practice charge against the Newton Teachers' Association (NTA) with the state Labor Relations Commission.

LD teachers claim NTA, their bargaining agent, did not represent them fairly during the recent contract negotiations.

The LD teachers were excluded from sharing in the professional development grants provided by the state. LD teacher representative Charlotte Mason said, "This will cause us substantial economic loss."

They charge that during contract negotiations, representatives of NTA were informed incorrectly that LD teachers were not eligible to receive the state money for salary increases.

According to Mason, NTA President Tony Croce responded to the charge, "indicating he would withhold any information he obtains regarding our eligibility to share in the grant money. LD teachers have been requesting this information since they first learned of the terms of the contract at the end of November."

Judy Rosenthal, team leader of the LD program at Newton North, said the teachers are willing to settle the matter, if possible, without involving the commission.

"We're hoping to settle this in-house, but if that's not possible, we will seek legal recourse," Rosenthal said.

Croce said the association has no choice but to resolve the complaint through labor mediation.

"We would prefer to treat it internally, as a family difference," Croce said. "Since that is not possible, let me say that the association and its representatives received and relied upon information in this matter on the state law in good faith."

Garden City to share in marathon profits

NEWTON — The Garden City, along with seven other communities, will receive a share of the profits from this year's Boston Marathon.

The city will receive $20,000 from the Boston Althetic Association (BAA) to be used for recreational programs that involve running. According to Mayor Theodore Mann, the BAA money represents a "break in the wall."

"It's been a long struggle since we first introduced it," Mann said of his pitch to have the BAA reimburse the communities along the route for race-related expenses. "The principle has been recognized by the BAA that this is the most important race in the world."

Last autumn, Mann and Boston Mayor Raymond Flynn began work on a reimbursement program because the BAA voted to offer prize money for competitors. Under the BAA's charter, if the marathon earns a profit it must donate funds to the race communities. Mann, pointing to the $35,000 he said Newton spends annually for "out-of-pocket" race-related expenses, had argued prior to the announcement that the BAA should reimburse the communities for those expenses.

The BAA, however, balked at that. The share of the profits they will distribute will go for recreational programs. Mann accepted that, adding if the BAA should win its law suit against Marshall Medoff the communities should get a proportion of any settlement.

"We would expect to be recompensed for any additional monies that would come from the Marshall Medoff case," Mann said. "Any funds that do come to us are on the condition that the race makes a profit. If there is no profit, then the city will not be eligible for any reimbursement. But, now that it is a commercial race, our position has been to be reimbursed for out-of-pocket expenses."

Legislature rejects private school aid bill

NEWTON — A proposed constitutional amendment allowing direct public aid to private schools in Massachusetts was defeated by a single vote last week in the state Legislature.

Opponents of the measure, Rep. David Cohen (D-Newton) and Rep. Susan Schur (D-Newton) said the amendment would have allowed private academies and parochial schools to pressure cities and towns for funding, draining resources from public schools.

Cohen said the law would be used to "coerce local communities into using their scarce local tax dollars to support and fund private education against their will."

Schur said the government has no obligation to support private education.

"The first obligation of government is to provide for public education," she said. "As long as there are problems getting resources for public education, the money shouldn't be drained."

A further concern is the stength of public education and making sure there is equal opportunity in it, she added.

Newton School Committee members Lynne Sullivan, Sally Rizzo and Jennifer Huntington said their concerns are similar.

"As a representative of a public school system, I'm terribly concerned about the drain of resources a law like this would have on public schools," Sullivan said. "We are given tax money to provide education and related services to 9,500 students, but we're not given that money to provide the same for all the children in our city."

It is a complex issue with "pros and cons on both sides," she added.

With limited resources allotted to public education, Rizzo said the public school system has to use as much money as possible on public schools.

Huntington said public money should be allocated only to public schools.

The Legislature voted, 100-88, in favor of the proposed school aid amendment, but state law requires 101 of 200 lawmakers to approve any constitutional change. Final approval by voters would be required.

Carnival raises $10,000 for education

NEWTON — A recent citywide Winter Carnival raised over $10,000 for the recently reactivated Newton School's Foundation (NSF).

The fund raiser was the first of many in an effort to raise money for innovative educational grants not included in the normal curriculum budget.

"What was nice about the carnival was the fact that it brought the whole city together to have a good time, while at the same time contributing to a wonderful cause," NSF President Richard Hamermesh said. "I was thrilled with the support, and it's a start as far as community awareness of the foundation."

NSF Director Marilynne Belangi said there are still donation checks coming in from citizens who could not attend the carnival, but were interested in the foundation's goals.

"People had a phenomenal time, and the money we raised will help us underwrite the enrichment programs we have planned," Belangi said.

It is not clear exactly what sort of grants will be financed yet, but it will soon be determined by the NSF Grant Committee, according to Hamermesh.

"We will return the money and have it spent in the schools," Hamermesh said. "This is just the beginning, and it has allowed us to go ahead in full swing."

Housing to replace Auburndale eyesore

NEWTON — Aldermen have taken steps to replace a 7 1/2 acre Auburndale eyesore with single-family homes and elderly apartments.

The Auburndale Avenue/Pine Street site used to be a Department of Public Works (DPW) yard. All that remains is a dilapidated and rodent-infested stable that once housed the city's horses.

Only Alderman Matthew Jefferson expressed less than enthusiastic support as the board recently voted unanimously for zoning changes so the land can be purchased by a Dedham development company.

The project calls for Auburndale Development Associates of Dedham to build 30 apartments for the elderly and 20 single-family homes.

Auburndale Development on Dec. 31 agreed to purchase the property for $750,000 and Mayor Theodore D. Mann released details of the proposed sale last month.

Attorney Howard Levine, who represents the company, said construction could begin this June and may be completed in six months.

Since the city owns the property, the site had no zoning. Aldermen had to zone part of the land for the proposed wood-framed garden apartment building and the rest for the proposed single-family homes, as well as grant special permits.

Two of the homes will be deeded to the Newton Housing Authority and six of the apartments will be reserved for low and moderate income elderly residents.

Jefferson said he would have preferred the apartments be for low- and moderate-income families rather than for the elderly.

"Just about any place you can put elderly housing in this city. The community accepts it far more readily," Jefferson explained after the vote.

Neighborhoods have a much harder time accepting low income housing, he said. Low and moderate income dwellings attract families, which increase school enrollment and can cause social problems, among other factors, Jefferson said.

While he praised the city for acquiring two homes out of the project, Jefferson estimated the other 18 single-family houses will sell for around $200,000 by the time they reach the market.

"I do not call that affordable housing," said Jefferson.

Boston College unveils dormitory plans

NEWTON — Plans for two six-level dormitories that would house 384 students along Commonwealth Avenue were unveiled recently by Boston College.

The school is asking the Board of Aldermen for a site plan approval for the petition, which calls for razing both Philomathiea and Alumni Halls in favor of student living quarters.

Under the so-called Dover Law which shields educational institutions from local zoning ordinances, the city cannot deny the petition. Site plan approval only allows the board to revise a developer's design plans.

Attorney Jane Pitt, representing BC, told the Land Use Committee public hearing that the plan will enhance the neighborhood by creating on-campus housing for students who would otherwise seek available low-and moderate-income housing in the city.

"There is a great need for housing on the campus," she said. "This plan would address that need. By converting the halls into housing units, BC would also be able to reduce the amount of traffic because it would reduce the number of commuting students."

In addition, Pitt said traffic flow on Commonwealth Avenue would be improved because access to and from the buildings slated for demolition would be denied under the BC proposal.

BC Director of Communications Laurence Barton said the new dormitories are needed to comply with the school's development forecasts for the next decade.

"We were one of the first schools to develop a 10-year plan," he said. "This is part of our program to control growth in the next decade. 94 percent of students applying to BC request on-campus housing, but we only have the capacity to house 67 percent. Right now, students are living in Allston, Brighton and Newton and taking up low- and moderate-income housing. Since 1976, we have frozen the number of applications we accept every year, but the 10-year plan calls for 1,100 new housing units. This plan is a step in that direction."

Sasaki Associates architect Roy Viklund said the new buildings will conform to the English Gothic style of the neighborhood. He added that all sewer and water requirements for the dorms would use the existing infrastructure of both Newton and Boston.

There was mixed reaction by BC neighbors who attended the hearing.

"If it were up to me," Ambrose R. Page of 789 Boylston St. said, "there would be a law that every college student would have to live on campus. I know that I'm old, and that sometimes us old folk tend to forget what it is like to be young. But putting these kids in a residential neighborhood is a disaster because they get rowdy and keep us up all night."

Hope is at hand for police and fire

The vehicle needed to drive Newton police and firefighters' contract talks out of the blind alley they have been in for almost two years is stalled on Beacon Hill.

House Bill 863, "an act relative to dispute resolution," promises to reinstate binding arbitration, which was dropped from the collective bargaining process when Proposition 2½ was approved. It was logical enough at the time. Legislators were concerned that a mediator might ask the city to pay more than it could afford, given revenues newly restricted by the tax cap.

Since then, the chairman of the Joint Labor-Management Committee (JLMC), Prof. John T. Dunlop, has reported to the governor that the agency responsible for nurturing labor disputes to a satisfactory conclusion is "a toothless tiger." The lack of any closure mechanism, by which mediators could order the resolution of a dispute, made his committee unable to move beyond an impasse.

Prof. Dunlop also noted, in 1984, that "low public safety morale and the increasing threat of job actions or strikes as an alternative to good faith bargaining" were the result of his committee's having "no teeth."

Anybody who sat in traffic in Newtonville Square, Newton Centre, West Newton or Newton Corner, while frustrated police and firefighters blocked traffic knows we have come a long way since 1984. Public safety morale is at a dismal low, and job actions are around the corner. The prospect of our police disrupting the upcoming Boston Marathon is talked of in real terms in some circles. News of Newton's dispute with public safety personnel could make headlines throughout "the global village."

The official job description of House Bill 863 makes it sound ideally suited for the present situation in Newton: "In situations where the process of collective bargaining ... has been exhausted, and where a continuing police or fire dispute threatens the public welfare, H863 would empower the JLMC to make a final determination, binding on the union and the municipal employer, but subject to approval or rejection by the local legislative body."

The JLMC would weigh all the facts, make a decision and ask the Board of Aldermen to ratify it. If the board refused, the JLMC's decision would cease to be binding, and the parties would return for further bargaining. The board's approval, on the other hand, would mean the JLMC's decision was backed by the superior court.

The city's objections to this means for bring binding arbitration back to the bargaining process are echoes from the first days of Prop. 2½, when they feared a mediator might strap them with expenses for which they had no revenues. But, in fact, municipal bargaining teams enjoy ample protection under House Bill 863.

Representatives of the municipalities, selected from the Local Government Advisory Council, supposedly advocates for cities and towns, enjoy a healthy majority on the JLMC when it comes time to vote. They would betray their constituents if they did not make fiscal responsibility their chief concern.

Further, arbitration would be limited to wages, hours and conditions of employment, leaving management its usual perogatives. Moreover, the bill places a three-year "sunset clause" on any binding arbitration, during which the JLMC monitor the situation to see if things turned out the way they thought they would.

Concern for the fiscal health of cities and towns is evident in the list of factors to be weighed by the JLMC in arriving at a decision. At the top of the list: "The award (is) to be consistent with the local taxes assessed in a town and appropriation for local aid in that fiscal year."

Listed as the second most important factor for the JLMC to weigh: "The financial amility of the municipality to meet costs."

The third most important consideration, according to the bill: "The interest and welfare of the public."

The Newton Graphic agrees with Kevin P. Blanchette, chairman of the House Committee on Public Service, that "House 863 represents a significant step forward in labor relations while keeping intact local fiscal autonomy ... It provides a workable, limited means for overcoming the most difficult hurdles in municipal collective bargaining."

Even more important, in our eyes, is the promise that, "If enacted, House 863 will restore a sense of purpose and meaning to the local public safety bargaining process."

We urge all those involved in the passage of House 863 to act with determination to hasten its implementation and insure that the Garden City will continue to enjoy the highest level of public safety services.

There are parking spaces in Newton Centre

The concerns most often voiced at the recent Village Study meeting in Newton Centre were predictable enough: Traffic is a nightmare and parking is impossible.

No doubt Connery Associates, the firm conducting the citywide study will attempt to address these problems. Their task is not an enviable one. Sweeping solutions have been put forth in the past, and nothing has been done.

We will leave the sweeping solutions to the experts. For the here and now, a more modest proposal might be appropriate.

Many, many of the available parking spaces in the commercially intensive section of Newton Centre are never available to the shopping public. They are already occupied early in the morning, taken by employees of the businesses there who "feed the meter" until they leave work at the end of the day.

It is our understanding that this is an illegal practice. Given the city's parking ordinances, these cars that sit at a meter all day can be ticketed every hour ... all day long. If this is the case, it seems difficult to believe that our meter maids, who seem to pounce on parking offenders in other parts of the city with a vengeance, have ignored the prospect of writing reams in Newton Centre.

To be more specific, let's send the ladies who so strictly patrol the West Newton Square municipal lot over to Newton Centre for a couple of weeks. If they can survive writer's cramp that long, employees of businesses in that area might start taking advantage of the plan suggested to them more than two years ago as a way out of their daily dilemma.

They can park in the Woodland MBTA lot for $1, take the T to work for $1.50 and ride back to their cars at the end of the day for free. $2.50 does not seem to be that outrageous a price for a day's parking, but as long as someone can monopolize a much-needed space all day for $2 in quarters no one will take advantage of the proposal.

Meanwhile, shoppers who can not stand the aggravation will stay away from the Centre in droves, and the same business owners whose employees duck out regularly to "feed the meter" will complain that "something must be done" about the parking situation there.

State census may be history

By William Robinson

House Republicans have filed a bill for the 1986 legislative session that would abolish the state census.

Currently, both the federal and the state conduct a decennial, or ten year, census; the federal count occurs at the start of each decade and the state counterpart at the midway point. The U.S. Census Bureau uses professionals trained in conducting such population counts. Massachusets, on the other hand, relies on city and town clerks and local census supervisors who compile the statistics in different ways, ranging from mail and phone surveys to door-to-door counts. Computerized forms used by the Secretary of State's office are also not compatible with the computer systems of the few municipalities that have them.

The cost of a state census is $6 - $10 million and will continue to grow as local officials demand proper funding to avoid the administrative problems that surfaced during the 1985 statewide count.

At a recent legislative committee hearing, even the Secretary of State's office, which directs the state census, sent a representative to testify in favor of abolishing the state census since it is "redundant, an administrative nightmare and very costly for the Commonwealth."

A degree of politics even enters into the census, since the state uses its own population figures to determine local aid distributions to cities and towns and to redraw House and Senate districts based on population shifts. All the more reason, for verification purposes, to put this task in the hands of a neutral body like the U.S. Census Bureau. Currently, an audit is being conducted of Boston's census in an attempt to verify figures that appear high.

The need for uniformity, verification and consistency weigh heavily in favor of eliminating the state census and instead relying on the federal census. To do so, however, would require an amendment to the state constitution. According to the secretary of state, if the 1990 federal census is to be used for the 1995 redistricting effort, an amendment should go to the voters in November of 1988.

I urge the state legislature to vote in favor of such an amendment and allow the voters of Massachusetts to eliminate a redundant and expensive practice.

Oil prices drop and experts flip flop

By Edward F. King

Oil prices continue to fall and the stock market soars. Interest rates drop and the building industry booms. Reaganomics reigns supreme. The doubters have been silenced.

The incredible performance of the American economy not only astounds and confounds the experts, but it also causes a "silly season" of sorts. People are led to say outrageous things in an attempt to mask their inability to understand current conditions.

But the booby prize for most inane suggestions has to go to the oil company president who recently testified before a congressional committee. Addressing the phenomena of plummeting oil prices, the oil leader told the elected officials that "something must be done." He hinted that some price support system should be adopted and that the federal government should "do something" to protect domestic oil companies from the world-wide problem of oversupply.

After you have finished roaring with laughter and drying your eyes, think of the lesson of the incident. Just a few years ago, with prices soaring, energy industry leaders warned us that price controls would lead to shortages, inhibit exploration, and encourage waste. They were absolutely right.

But, now that the shoes have changed feet, look who suggests government action! Obviously, it depends on whose ox is being gored.

The lesson is simple. With a few highly principled exceptions, people who are currently prospering from a given condition are opposed to government action and intervention and strongly favor free markets. When the pendulum swings and the very same people suffer financial reverses, they instinctively want to be bailed out, subsidized, and protected.

Hypocrisy abounds. Labor leaders who think that wage controls are immoral have no problem supporting import quotas. Businessman who find price controls to be anathema are perfectly willing to endorse cost-containment legislation to hold down the cost of their company medical plans.

And so it goes. Bankers who preach free enterprise to their customers will fight the deregulation of financial services. And consumers who enjoy price wars between competing air lines will sign a petition to restrict or prevent new businesses from moving into their neighborhood.

Until the realization sinks in to all of our people - that freedom always works best for the greatest numbers - we are doomed to lurch from one crazy-quilt government program to another. From one distortion of our economy to another. And from one crisis to another.

Cops, firefighters need new protest method

To the editor:

The recent public protests by the Newton Fireman and Police Department certainly got some attention, but I'm not sure it got the sympathy they were seeking.

Those of us who got stuck in the snarls at West Newton or Newton Corner were decidely less than sympathetic to the cause as we drove home to other towns (Who can afford to live in Newton?).

I agree that working without a contract is unsatisfactory and probably unacceptable, but to demonstrate in a manner that is likely to only frustrate and endanger motorists seems counterproductive to me. I could only wonder if someone wanted to demonstrate for nuclear disarmament or a pro-choice rally would get the same courteous help from the police during the evening rush hour. Surely a more appropriate demonstration technique could be found.

Residents opposed to changes at Marriott

Open letter to President of the Board of Aldermen Chairman Malec:

We are writing as members of the Auburndale community to express our opposition to the current fourth (4th) petition of the owners of the Newton Marriott hotel to change the Order of Conditions which the 1967 Board of Aldermen wisely imposed upon the development of this site in order to protect and preserve the residential community of Auburndale.

The current reasons proposed by the Marriott to increase the existing function space by converting the garage area, which was approved on the site plan solely for "future parking" (which is sorely needed to lessen the existing traffic and parking burdens on the community), into a "conference Lecture room" for "students" are wholly without merit, especially when less drastic alternatives exist to allowing a change in the original Order of Conditions which would increase the level of intensity of use of this site which has reached its maximum level of use already, as, for example, converting a portion of the existing function space for this requested use.

As you know, (i) the Marriott cannot guarantee that the current level of use will not increase and be a further burden on the community if this petition is granted; (ii) there is no firm written or oral commitment from the Oliver White Company or any other customer for dedicated use of this space and in the manner represented by the most recent of several managers and current advocate for this petition, Mr. Arndheim; (iii) the conversion of the garage area would forever bar this area from being utilized for the parking for which it was intended as represented to the Board as a condition for the approval of the site development, and would set a dangerous precedent for continued development requests by the Marriott; and (iv) this space would be available for use and sale by this aggressive business operator for all times in which it is not occupied thereby creating foreseeable traffic and parking problems.

For these reasons, we respectfully request that you uphold the original Order of Conditions and deny this petition.

A. Peter Kastner, Auburndale
Richard E. Kaplan, Auburndale

Student expectations soar as projects take flight

David Rubin with his aerodynamic design. Art Illman photo

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON - The paper is intricately folded, but it is uncertain how much thought went into the mechanics and angles of the creases. The teacher turns her back, giving some prankster the chance to throw his paper airplane across the room.

For most children, it is the thrill of not being caught. It might even be more fun if someone else gets blamed for being a class clown.

For Newton Advanced Challenge elementary school students, paper airplanes serve a more serious scientific purpose — mastering the laws of aerodynamics. The youngsters are concerned more with the patterns and reasons behind the success or failure of their flights than with how far their planes fly.

Science Specialist Bill Radomski organized the First Newton Advanced Challenge Paper Airplane Contest for 12 talented fifth and sixth graders to demonstrate their scientific prowess Monday.

Students' expectations soared in the Bigelow Junior High School gymnasium before the contest. But once it began, an element of disappointment was in the air. Some experienced the thrill of success, while others inevitably felt the frustration of defeat.

All entries had to be made of paper, and each contestant was given two weeks to prepare aircrafts for launch. Scotch tape and glue could be used for bonding purposes only, not to add weight.

Taylor Heanue, 12, won both the accuracy toss and the distance throw. His plane flew 66 feet before touching ground, and he managed to throw his airplane twice through a two-foot hula hoop from approximately 16 feet. He and one other student, Justin Neisuler, were the only two contestants to fly their planes through the hoop. Heanue's success is attributed to the four-winged design of his aircraft.

"Because my plane is dart-shaped and heavy in the tip, I had better control of it," Heanue said. "I also had twice the wing surface of a two-winged plane, and that's why my plane went so far," he said.

For Justin Neisuler, 12, the real reason behind his success was blind luck. Neisuler won the hang-time category, keeping his aircraft aloft for a 5.7 seconds class record.

"I think the reason I won is because my plane drifted around in circles because the weight of it is imbalanced," he said. "I think I folded it wrong."

Furthermore, the high ceilings in the gymnasium were an asset, he added.

"When I practiced flying it in my house, it kept hitting the ceilings because they're so low," Neisuler said. "I knew the only chance I had was to throw my plane straight up and let it float down."

The contest rules allowed students to use a different plane design for each category, but very few students used more than one plane.

"Some of the kids put all their eggs in one design basket and found that it wasn't the way," Radomski said. "Some of them had some good ideas, and next week we'll discuss why some failed and others succeeded."

Students are assigned to measure the surface areas of the wings and bodies of their planes for next week's class.

"I want them to understand the reasons why their aircrafts worked or didn't work," Radomski said. "Overall, the accuracy toss was their weakest area, and hopefully next week they'll discover why."

The advanced challenge program is in an experimental stage for the city's most brilliant students. Once a week, Radomski gets in his van to pick-up his students from five participating elementary schools for their 90 minute class. The students are pulled out of their regular science classes to participate in advanced challenge.

"These are kids who assimilate and gobble up information faster than others," Radomski said. "Even when all things are working well in the regular school curriculum, some of our best kids are hard to challenge."

The pilot program allows these students to experiment, explore and discuss things among peers who are at the same intellectual level, he added.

"The learning in my class occurs because of the dynamics within a group of very bright and interested youngsters, rather than by my delivering information in a one-to-one or small group tutorial situation," Radomski said.

1991 could bring $1,000 sewer bills

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann does not believe a household should have to pay $1,000 a year to flush its toilets and turn on its water faucets.

But that is what the Massachusetts Water Resources Authority (MWRA) reportedly has predicted the average family may have to pay annually for sewer-water services by 1991.

The city has never figured what the average sewer-water costs per household are, but in recent discussions about raising municipal charges for those services, local officials used as an example a family of five that paid $240 in 1985.

At his weekly press conference, Mann said he and officials from other communities will meet with Governor Michael S. Dukakis some time before May 15 to discuss reducing residents' future sewer-water costs.

At the least, Mann wants the state to pay $36 million in debts the authority inherited from the Metropolitan District Commission, which was responsible for sewer-water services before the MWRA was created last year.

Behind the projected rapid rise in rates is the MWRA's responsibility to clean up Boston Harbor, the cost of which the authority's 51-member communities will likely bear, Mann said.

The state should help pay for the cleanup since the harbor attracts visitors who pay state meal and hotel taxes, Mann said. And the harbor brings in trade for all of Massachusetts, he said.

"Boston harbor is a regional asset that has developed income for the Commonwealth of Massachusetts," said Mann.

The cleanup responsibility also belongs to the federal government since the harbor generates jobs that produce income tax, he said.

Boston itself has responsibility for the cleanup because its "major commercial enterprises" create too much waste for city sewers to handle, thereby polluting the harbor, he said.

And like the state, the harbor generates income by bringing in visitors who pay the recently enacted municipal hotel-motel tax, Mann said.

The MWRA prediction that sewer-water services could cost the average household $1,000 annually in five years was reported to aldermen last week by Stephen Cirillo, the city's chief budget officer.

In addition, he said the authority is considering raising its charges to member communities by 74.8 percent next fiscal year, twice what was anticipated.

Under the MWRA's present funding plans for the harbor clean-up, Newton residents "would be paying a disproportionate share," Mann said. "The greatest beneficiaries are the federal and state government."

While he holds out hope the state will help, Mann noted the governor has recently turned a deaf ear to communities such as Newton that pleaded for more state aid to offset federal cuts.

"The governor hasn't been too sympathetic lately," said Mann.

Relief for cops and fire under review

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

BOSTON — Relief may be on the way for police and firefighters who complain that there is no way to impose wage settlements on their municipal employers. A bill to reinstate binding arbitration on negotiations between municipalities and police and fire unions is up for discussion in the state House of Representatives this week.

Binding arbitration for municipal labor disputes was repealed with the 1981 passage of Proposition 2½. The bill would give the Joint Labor Management Committee (JLMC) responsibility for imposing settlements on negotiations "where mediation and fact finding have been exhausted," according to sponsor Rep. Kevin Blanchette (D-Lawrence).

JLMC Chairman John Dunlop says his committee "is a toothless tiger" because of the lack of any closure mechanism such as binding arbitration. "The lack of a closure mechanism is the chief impediment to the committee's efforts to move beyond impasse."

According to Blanchette, if passed, the JLMC would impose binding arbitration in situations where the process of collective bargaining has been exhausted and where prolonged police or fire disputes threaten public welfare. After meeting with both sides, the JLMC would make a final determination that would be binding on both union and employer, subject to the approval of the municipal legislature. In Newton, any decision would require approval of the Board of Aldermen.

The way the bill currently reads, the JLMC would consider a municipality's available fiscal resources, including state provided local aid and real estate taxes. According to Blanchette staffer Donna Bean, the JLMC would take into account Newton's reported $8.6 million surplus if they were to make a decision in the dispute.

Only wages, hours and condition of employment would fall under the bill. The JLMC would have no jurisdiction over appointments, promotions assignments or transfers.

Mayor Theodore Mann has argued against the bill in the past on the grounds that "it ties a city or town's hands by imposing a settlement without taking into account future fiscal needs." Blanchette says that this bill would allow city officials to point out such concerns during bargaining sessions without having it construed as an unfair labor practice.

Rumor confirmed: Cops may picket marathon

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Police Association (NPA) President Lynda Glenn has confirmed rumors that police and firefighters may picket during the April 21 Boston Marathon after another 10 hours of negotiations with the city failed to produce any resolution of the 20-month-old labor dispute.

"Anything is possible at this time," Glenn said after talks broke down for the second consecutive night last week shortly after 12:30 a.m. "The officers are angry and frustrated that the city has refused to budge an inch. I have no control over them and the city is aware of that. I hope we don't have to come to the point where we will protest during the marathon but we have to do something."

The two sides will have to wait two weeks before resuming negotiations because mediator Timothy Bornstein will not be available until March 26.

Glenn said she "did not want to have to go back to the membership without a contract" and that the only reason her bargaining team agreed to the March 26 meeting was "a lack of alternatives."

"I don't know what to do," she said. "I am as angry and frustrated as the membership and I am open to suggestions."

While refusing to comment on details of the negotiations this morning, Glenn has said in the past that the NPA bargaining team is seeking a package of wage increases similar to the recently enacted teacher's contract. Newton teachers in December won raises of 7, 7 and 6 percent beginning the end of this school year.

City officials have said that they are offering a four-year, 23.4 percent increase. Glenn called that figure "hogwash."

"I don't know how (Chief Administrative Officer Richard) Kelliher arrived at those numbers," she said. "If we could get a 23.4 percent raise, we would take it. When he uses those figures, he is actually compounding the numbers. The way we look at it, they are offering us a 21.5 percent raise."

Firefighters may join BAA marathon picket

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Firefighters and police may picket the April 21 Boston Marathon if there is no progress in contract discussions with the city, Newton Firefighters Association president Kevin McArdle said last week.

Earlier, Mayor Theodore D. Mann announced negotiators for the city and firefighters plan to meet sometime this week. The session will be the first since 15 hours of bargaining Feb. 4.

A picket of the Boston Marathon would focus public attention on the plight of firefighters and police, McArdle said.

"If we have to picket the marathon and get worldwide attention, we will," said McArdle.

The marathon winds through Newton over Washington Street and Commonwealth Avenue.

"I'm hoping it never happens," he said of a marathon picket. But if it did, "Never, ever, ever would public safety be jeopardized," said McArdle.

Salary is the key issue blocking a settlement between the city and the two unions.

Representatives of police and firefighter unions have said the want a raise similar to what teachers accepted last December - a 7 percent increase both for 1986 and 1987 and a 6 percent increase for 1988.

City officials have argued the teacher contract was fueled with state funds from the last year's education reform bill that simply are not available for other unions.

But McArdle noted the teacher contract for 1984 and 1985 had a higher raise than was ever offered to police and firefighters.

"And there was no state money then," McArdle said.

If the city wants firefighters to sign a four-year contract, the latest teacher settlement will be a factor in negotiations, McArdle said.

"We're going to expect to get something close," he said.

Weld backs 'environmental terrorists'

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — U.S. Attorney William F. Weld last week told members of the Charles River Watershed Association (CRWA) to hold his "feet in the fire" to ensure his office fights environmental abuse at every turn.

Mixing wry humor with legalisms, Weld told the approximately 100 persons gathered at the CRWA's 1986 Celebrity Dinner not to be reluctant about approaching law enforcement officials for help with environmental controversies.

"The greatest source of leads that we have noticed is either disgruntled employees who just couldn't hack it any more ... or, in a surprising number of cases, citizen complaints," said Weld, himself a CRWA member and self-proclaimed "environmental terrorist."

He also left the CRWA with some tongue-in-cheek advice on "a project" they might want to pursue during the coming year.

"The one thing that you simply must achieve, and I'm sure you can if you all work together, is to finally, once and for all get Rita Barron out of her shell," he said in reference to the group's firebrand executive director.

Weld, whose wife, Susan, is a former CRWA board member, expressed the hope that his office can begin to pursue more environmental matters through criminal litigation.

> 'There's nothing like a few court orders to get their attention.'
> William Weld

He said that effort might be bolstered by a kind of exchange program that has brought an attorney from the Environmental Protection Agency's regional office into his office for one year to work as an assistant U.S. attorney specializing in such issues.

Weld said he has raised to five the number of attorneys working full-time on environmental matters, an issue he described as his third-highest priority behind public corruption and narcotics.

There were no full-time attorneys with that focus when he took over the U.S. attorney's slot from Edward F. Harrington five years ago, he added.

Most of his address served to update CRWA members on the pending civil suits the federal government is sponsoring in an effort to protect or restore harbors, rivers and wetlands.

The most visible of these is the lawsuit seeking to compel state and local authorities to stop discharging sludge and raw sewage into Boston Harbor in violation of the Clean Water Act.

He said the case illustrates a longstanding issue: "Do you go to court and compel people to do things that they said they were going to do anyway?"

Weld and EPA Regional Administrator Michael Deland came under fire from several state lawmakers for pressing the suit at a time when the Legislature seemed close to a political solution.

He said his reason for mounting an aggressive legal attack was the fleeting resolve often displayed by political leaders and his sense that "goodwill" does not always translate into action.

Gov. Michael S. Dukakis was "much more gung-ho" about forcing movement on the harbor issue than Attorney General Francis X. Bellotti, whom Weld said had "procedural difficulties" with his approach.

"There's nothing like a few court orders to get their attention," Weld said of the Legislature's role in finally creating a new authority to handle the clean-up,."

He also compared the Legislature's operating methods to "the Baltimore City Council's snow removal plan.

"It's called spring," Weld said.

He said the issues of "liability and responsibility" involved with the Superfund lawsuit to clean up the chemical pollutants in New Bedford Harbor should be resolved "within a year."

"The more difficult problem will be determining a remedy," added Weld, who said the suit is unique because it seeks compensation for the damage to the harbor's lobster and fish population.

The one area where environmentalists are "losing ground daily" is the protection of the wetlands that serve as water purifiers and flood control buffers, Weld said.

He credited the CRWA for helping to combat the problem by pressuring the government to purchase or set aside tracts along the Charles River's 80-mile route.

U.S. Attorney William Weld chats with CRWA's Rita Barron.

Schur to be challenged

By Edward Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON — John E. Carlucci, the Republican opponent of State Rep. Susan D. Schur, has promised to go door-to-door in the 12th Middlesex District to bring his "lower taxes" campaign to the voters.

Carlucci, 30, officially announced his candidacy and a number of GOP endorsements during a Monday afternoon press conference at the Pierce House on Chestnut Street in West Newton.

A post-polio quadraplegic, Carlucci said the door-to-door visits will be one part of an effort to raise $20,000 for his campaign.

Schur's district, which slices through six wards and 12 precincts, is located primarily along the city's western boundary.

Although backed by a number of prominent Republican leaders, Carlucci made his first gaff of the still young political season by saying that he "anticipates" an endorsement from Ward 5 Alderman-at-Large Paul E. Coletti.

"He has shown himself to be leaning toward the more moderate wing of his party," he said of Coletti, the city's Finance Committee chairman and a registered Democrat.

But Coletti, who considered running for Schur's seat before she ruled out a bid to succeed retiring State Sen. Jack Backman, said Monday night he has no intention of supporting Carlucci's candidacy.

John Carlucci

"I do not even know this gentleman. I have never had the pleasure of meeting him or even speaking to him. It offends me greatly to have somebody indicate I am endorsing them when we have never even spoken.

"I would never endorse a person for a seat that I had planned to run for," Coletti added.

Flanked by his wife, Kelly, Carlucci said he has been endorsed by Citizens for Limited Taxation activist Sam Robbins, former aldermanic candidate John Amicangioli, the Republican State Committee and the Republican City Committee.

He also has the backing of the Disabled Rights Union and the Disabled Alliance of Massachusetts.

In addition, Carlucci said he "tacit endorsements" from the Massachusetts Taxation Committee and the Newton Taxpayers Association.

The motivation for his campaign is the feeling that "it's high time somebody tackled the issue of taxes in this city," he said.

Repeatedly referring to Schur as "this woman," Carlucci charged the incumbent with being "bound and determined to raise taxes higher" and said she voted against a tax rebate for the elderly in 1984.

"This woman does not have the best interests of the taxpayers in mind," he added.

Carlucci called for no new state taxes, no increase in federal taxes, an increase in the personal exemption limit on state taxes and an elimination of the state tax on Individual Retirement Accounts (IRAs).

He also called for a reduction in the size of the state bureaucracy through the elimination of personnel and cumbersome forms and regulations.

"Your tax money is going to keep the bureaucrats in power," Carlucci said. "A 15-percent reduction in the state bureaucracy will result in a $3 billion tax savings. We're being regulated right out of our pocketbooks."

The Everett native also claimed to have more political experience than Schur, a former alderman, by virtue of his "grassroots political work" over the last 15 years.

Carlucci, a freelance writer who moved to the city late in 1984, served as a field coordinator for John Sears' 1982 gubernatorial campaign and Elliot Richardson's 1984 run for the U.S. Senate.

He holds a bachelor's degree in English and history from the University of Massachusetts at Boston.

"I really didn't want this," Alderman Domenic Taglienti said of the moratorium, "but I feel backed into a corner when I look at the results of the Village Study and see that we can expect development in this city to triple and quadruple."

Another key factor in the vote was an amendment by Alderman Richard McGrath to exclude from the moratorium any development that requires board approval. Many aldermen who had opposed the petition in the past said they voted favorably Monday night because of that amendment.

"I had opposed it in the past," Alderman Louis Irwin said. "I thought it was too broad and not focused enough, but the McGrath amendment changed that by limiting a moratorium to only those buildings that the board cannot deny."

Alderman Cynthia Creem agreed.

"With this petition and the amendment," she said, "this board can continue to act as a permit-granting body. I had opposed this in the past because I did not want to give up the responsibility for granting or denying permits, but with the McGrath amendment, I supported it."

In addition, with the amendment, the new law excludes the construction of multi-family buildings from the moratorium. That swayed some housing advocates like Sondra Shick, but Matthew Jefferson and Carol Robinson still opposed it.

"I recognize that some 7,000 people voted for it," Jefferson said of the moratorium ballot question. "I take that not as a mandate, but as an advisory vote. I suspect what we are reacting to is size and bigness. We have to ask, 'When is Newton going to close its doors for good?' I agree that the development on Crafts Street is a disgrace, but there is not one single thing we can do about it now."

Jefferson said changing zones was a better way of protecting the city, adding that a moratorium "will undermine the tax base if we shut development down."

Thomas Paulini, who lead the fight to enact a moratorium, was estatic. "We fought a long time on this," he said, "and this was a long time coming. I was a little surprised that we had as many votes as we did, but I will gladly take them. I think that this version is a good compromise with McGrath's amendment. The hardest compromise we made, I think, is that one year may not be enough time. I held out for 18 months as the original petition read, because it may take a little longer for the ZAC recommendations to be passed."

Alderman Paul Daley, a strong moratorium opponent, said he did everything he could to defeat the petition, adding that "It will put pressure on the ZAC and the Village Study to finish before the moratorim expires."

ROLL CALL VOTE ON THE MORATORIUM PETITION:

AYE: Barker, Basham, Bauckman, Bryson, Bullwinkle, Carmichael, Coletti, Creem, Davidson, Gentile, Irwin, Mansfield, Marini, McGrath, Reilly, Shaevel, Shick, Taglienti, Vance and Malec.

NAY: Daley, Jefferson and Robinson.

Chief's house ruled illegal

Quinn can appeal to the Zoning Board of Appeals for a variance to allow the third unit, Gentile said. "Whether he'll get it is something else," Gentile said. "It's a gamble."

Columbus was acting on a complaint made by Newton landlord Shirley Jaffe, who was prosecuted by the city for allegedly having a two-family home in a single-family zone at 58 Winthrop St.

Cambridge District Court Judge Arthur Sherman ruled against Jaffe and her husband Leon, fining them $12,000. The case is now being reviewed by the state's Supreme Judicial Court (SJC).

Jaffe has accused the city of selective enforcement of zoning ordinances and has lodged over 300 complaints of alleged zoning and building code violations with the city.

Jaffe said she is disappointed the city took so long to act on her complaint, which she submitted more than two weeks ago.

But the controversy over Quinn's building may aid her efforts to make the public aware of the city's many unreported zoning and building code violations, she said.

"It's been very good for publicity. I can't deny that," she said. "It's bringing it to the people. I think they can relate to the chief better than other people because he is the chief."

She said she is not "going after" Quinn, simply asking he be given the same treatment accorded her.

Quinn should have known the premises could only have two units legally, she said. "I think he should have admitted he had an illegal three-family," said Jaffe.

At 58 Winthrop St., the city ordered her to take out pipes from the basement to the building's second kitchen, Jaffe said. Removing the pipes could cause structural damage to the building, she said.

The city also ordered her to evict some of her tenants, Jaffe said. Those orders are on hold pending an SJC ruling, she said.

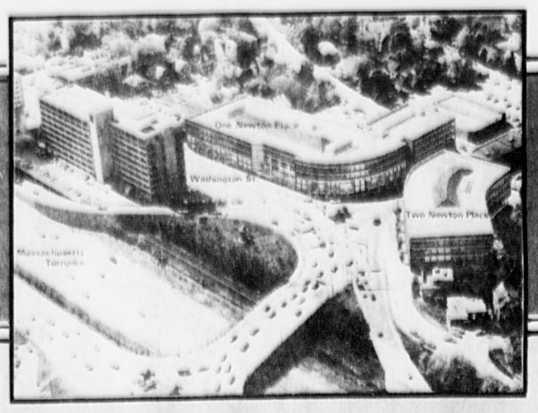

Jaffe questioned whether the Building Department would demand that Quinn do the same.

BU student Mike Hicks and Alamaro blessed with hydropower resources.

Use of the Birkeland and Eyde process (named after its creators) was widespread in Norway until World War II — after which it was abandoned when less expensive technology using oil or natural gas was developed.

"At the time, the success of the Norwegian venture was a sensation," Alamaro says. "It was hailed as a solution to the worldwide nitrogen crisis."

Alamaro proposes to revive the Norwegian process for international business applications by making it mobile. By mounting the reactor units on flatbed trucks, he hopes to create a system which "brings the fertilizer to the customer" — eliminating transportation and storage costs.

"Not to downgrade myself," he says, "but I'm really only taking a proven system and adding four wheels."

Nontheless, Alamaro has been issued patents in Isreal, Germany, Britain and the U.S. for modifications to increase the efficiency of the Birkeland and Eyde process.

The original Norwegian reactors operated at approximately 3- to 4-percent efficiency, with the remaining energy escaping through heat loss. Using modern heat recovery techniques, Alamaro says he has improved efficiency to 10 percent.

But he has his sights on even grander schemes. Even greater efficiency could be achieved, Alamaro theorizes, by forcing air through the reactor chamber at supersonic speeds and recycling the lost kinetic and thermal energy.

"The supersonic reactors currently is in a very fundemental, basic stage," he says.

By virtually all reports, the need for fertilizer is critical in developing countries — which use a small fraction of the 50 pounds-per-acre used by industrialized nations.

Although he envisions systems of several sizes, Alamaro is most interested in manufacturing 10-megawatt plasma reactors at an estimated cost of $5 million apiece. Such a unit would create between five and six tons of fertilizer per hour — enough to supply 200 acres per year. He says such a unit would pay for itself within two years, but conceeds fluctuating electric costs remain the unknown factor in the equation.

Alamaro currently is looking to raise a $140,000 in seed money to conduct three months of initial market research into the proposal. After this, he will require several million dollars to produce a prototype and plans to open things up to investors.

The end goal is to create a U.S.-based multinational company which would manufacture the systems for lease or sale. A devotee of pure capitalism, Alamaro views this goal strictly from a business perspective, as a means of exploring a "vast, untapped market."

"I'm interested in big systems and purely capitalistic applications," he says. "If a charitable group wants to buy a reactor and produce fertilizer in Ethiopia, fine. But I'm not going to work for the U.N."

Statements like these have endeared Alamaro neither to his peers nor potential backers. He admits that part of his difficulty in fundraising has resulted from a notable lack of university or corporate affiliations.

"I'm an outlaw in that regard," he says.

This "outlaw" status is nothing new. Back in 1980, Alamaro journeyed to Norway to study the original Birkeland and Eyde system. At that time he tried to interest Norwegian industry in reviving the process — without success.

"In Norway they don't like me because I'm going to compete with them with their own national invention," he says smugly.

In some six years of marketing the concept, Alamaro has had numerous nibbles, but few solid bites. Scientists at MIT, Harvard, NASA, the Tennesee Valley Authority and the U.S. Dept. of Agriculture have expressed interest in the proposal.

But in general, the major laboratories have been unwilling to put their money where their mouth is.

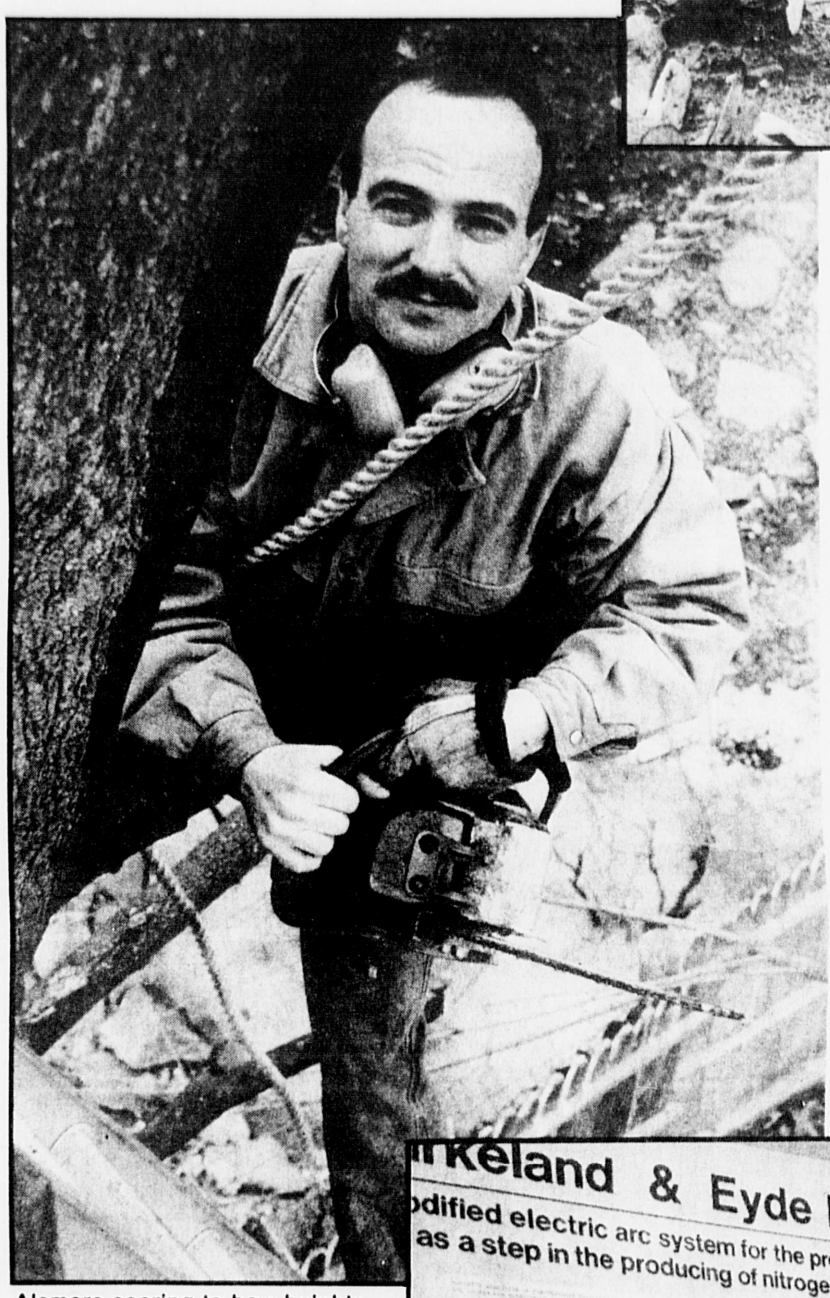

To keep things moving in the interim, Alamaro has sold his idea to minor investors, like Newton resident and Brandeis University mathematics professor Clint Scoviel.

"First, I liked his financial idea in terms of how this product fits a certain market by taking advantage of an abundance of power in the Third World," said Scoviel, who contributed $1,000. "Second, I don't feel he's the kind of guy who's going to give up."

Scoviel isn't alone in his optomism. Alamaro has made believers out of Russell C. Phillips and Chester W. Marynowski at the Stanford Research Institute — who vouched for the system when it came under the scrutiny of the U.S. Patent Office — and Ray A. Goldberg, a professor at Harvard's Graduate School of Business Administration who said the proposal has "far reaching commercial potential."

In addition, Alamaro received an honorable mention in a recent contest for energy-related inventions sponsored by Boston Edison.

But thusfar no one had been forthcoming with the kinds of big money Alamaro needs to launch his venture. As a result, he spend a good part of his free time operating a tree business out of his Tremont Avenue home.

Alamaro soaring to hew heights

"It's really physical work and it's risky — just look at my hands," he says, spreading his scarred fingers. "At the end of the day I'm really exhausted."

Alamaro says he resorted to the tree work after realizing his non-citizen status prevented him from from working on defense projects for government contractors. And while it is not exactly on the scale of his fertilizer project, is more than paying Alamaro's bills — Hurricane Gloria ensured that.

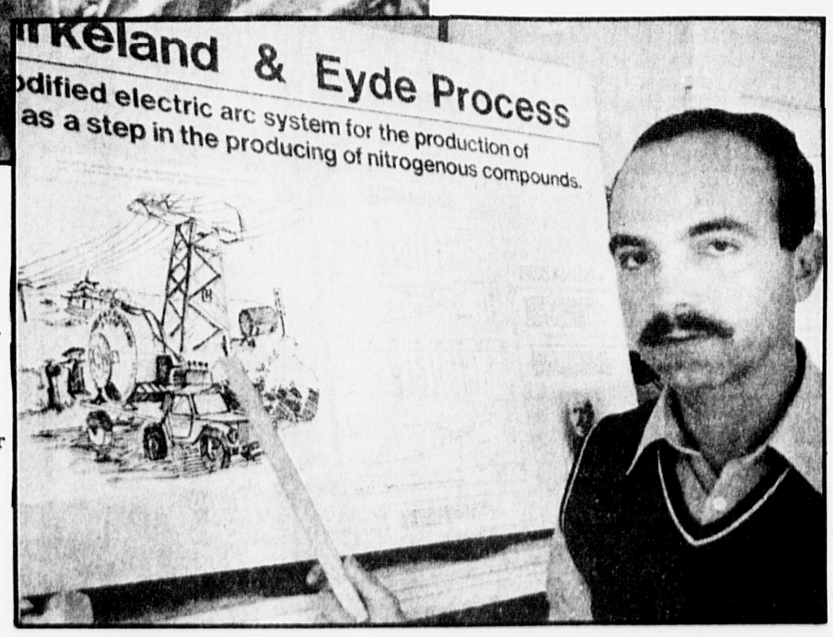

"To tell the truth," he says rather self-consciously, "I'm making more money than I've ever made in my life."

'I'm interested in big systems and purely capitalistic applications. If a charitable group wants to buy a reactor and produce fertilizer in Ethiopia, fine. But I'm not going to work for the U.N.'

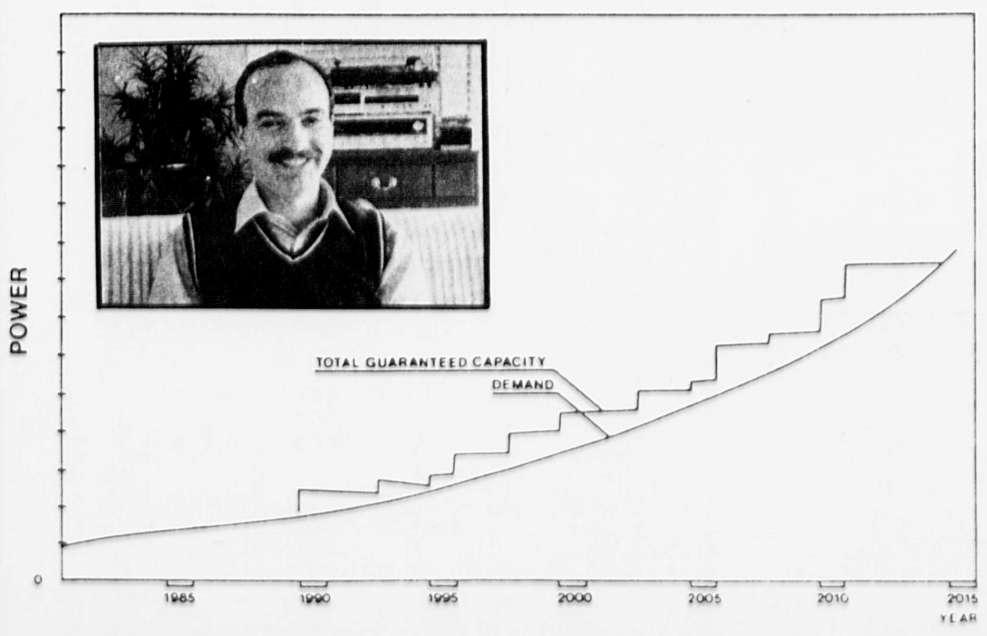

Moshe Alamaro

'First, I liked his financial idea in terms of how this product fits a certain market by taking advantage of an abundance of power in the Third World. Second, I don't feel he's the kind of guy who's going to give up.'

Alamaro (insert) authored chart showing demand for power vs. actual growth.

DO YOU BELIEVE IN MAGIC?

For laymen, the Birkeland and Eyde nitrogen-fixing process sounds almost like magic — creating fertilizer out of thin air.

It's not quite that simple. But if Moshe Alamaro succeeds with his plans, and despite his hard-line-capitalist stance, the results still could be miraculous for food-deficient Third World countries.

In the Birkeland and Eyde process, an electric arc is passed through the air in a reactor chamber. The arc jumps across a magnetic field, which to the naked eye flattens the alternating currents into a disc shape.

This process produces nitric oxides, which are added to water to produce a weak nitric acid solution. When reacted with limestone it forms nitrates — the key element in fertilizer.

Alamaro stresses this technology is not pie-in-the-sky. It was proven in Norway for more than 30 years, until shouldered aside by a German process which uses petroleum to produce nitrogen fertilizer.

On a large scale, the petroleum-based method remains more efficient than the Birkeland and Eyde process. But several factors could make a return to this technology attractive — not the least of which is that petroleum-fertilizer plants typically take decades to construct and bring on-line.

Alamaro's units would be constructed in the U.S., rolling off assembly lines and rolling into areas of need to take advantage of a second factor: because of massive irrigation and hydroelectric projects, many developing countries have more power than they can use.

This mimics "the economic and agricultural conditions that existed in Norway 70 years ago," Alamaro says. "Power is going unused everywhere."

Of greater importance is a condition Alamaro has identified whereby the capacity to produce power (in this case, electricity) routinely increases in large increments. Consumer demand, on the other hand, increases gradually and takes a while to catch up — temporarily resulting in excess capacity.

This excess capacity means cheaper rates. Furthermore, Alamaro's portable reactors could be operated at night, during off-peak hours, resulting in even less expensive production of fertilizer.

Seventh graders at Beaver Country Day School recently studied the Kennedy assassination through oral history projects and original newspapers from the period. Newton residents were: Heather Wolf, Wendy Bieber, Shira Lebson, Keith Weiner, Jennifer Zises, Jon McDonagh Burgess, Liana Brower, Jennifer Allen, Julie Beck and Gabrielle Arenella.

History lesson helps bridge gap

NEWTON — Beaver Country Day School has found a way to bridge the generation gap through its seventh grade history course, which uses oral history assignment to establish a connection with an historical event through a relative or family friend.

Students were assigned to interview adults old enough to recall the assassination of John F. Kennedy. The interviews were taped and shared with the entire class as part of each student's presentation.

Kennedy's assassination was studied as part of a larger unit on U.S. government and the office of the presidency. Beaver's teachers, Alice Davino and Ann Grayson, tied together the presidency unit with a trip to the Kennedy Library. They also used original newspapers and other artifacts from November 1963 to teach the details of the event and to give a sense of reality to the study of recent U.S. history.

Study of the Kennedy era will lead to consideration of the entire decade of the 1960s later this year, including issues such as the Civil Rights Movement, the Johnson Administration, and the Vietnam War.

Both Grayson and Davino expect that the sense of immediacy gained by the students via their interviews will make the study of this period more than just another history lesson.

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL
THE GOLD LADY

PEARL WISDOM

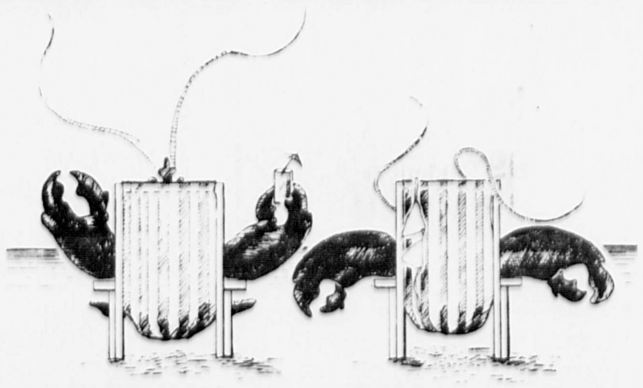

An old Arab legend explains it this way: Pearls were formed when dew drops filled with moonlight fell into the ocean and were swallowed by oysters. The scientific explanation is that a pearl forms when an irritant works its way into a particular species of oysters, mussels and clams. As a defense mechanism, the mollusk secretes a fluid to coat the irritant. Many layers of this coating form the lustrous pearl. A cultured pearl undergoes the same process. The difference is that the irritant is a surgically implanted mother-of-pearl bead. As long as there are enough layers of nacre to result in a gem-quality pearl, the size of the nucleus is of little importance to beauty or durability.

Nature's offsprings are beautiful things all can appreciate. Objects from nature come in many colors, and pearls are no exception. At CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" you'll learn about the various kinds of pearls plus see an impressive display of them. Still popular are the fresh water pearls in earrings, rope chains and bracelets. They are also magnificent combined with other gems, which brings out the lustre of these stones. We guarantee your satisfaction at 109 Dalby St., Newton. Tues., Wed., Sat. 10-6; Thurs. & Fri. til 9. Tel. 332-5935.

Boston is among top five cities in housing costs

By Martin Crutsinger
Associated Press Writer

WASHINGTON — California upheld its reputation of having the highest housing costs in the nation last year, with San Francisco ranking No. 1, and two other West Coast cities rated among the top five, according to a study by the U.S. league of Savings Institutions.

Homes in the San Francisco metropolitan area sold last year for a median price of $152,000, more than twice the national median price of $75,000, the league reported. The median is the midpoint, with half the homes selling for more and half for less.

After San Francisco, the most expensive area for home purchases was New York City with a median sales price of $129,700, followed by Boston, $126,000; Los Angeles, $123,000; and Anaheim-Santa Ana-Garden Grove, Calif., with a median sales price last year of $122,000.

The league based its rankings of 46 metropolitan areas on information pulled from 16,300 conventional mortgage loans made by member associations.

At the other end of the scale, some of the cheapest housing was found in the Midwest, where a depressed economy has contributed to holding down home costs.

The least expensive city among those surveyed was Pittsburgh, where the median price of a home was $54,152, followed by Dayton, Ohio, $54,750; Cincinnati, $55,300, Bloomington-Normal, Ill., $55,900, and Akron, Ohio, and Reading, Pa., both with median home prices last year of $56,000.

The typical American buying a median-priced home of $75,000 last year made a downpayment of $14,000, representing just under 20 percent of the cost of the house, leaving a monthly mortgage payment of $573.

To the mortgage payment was added $75 for real estate taxes, $100 for electricity and other utility costs and $22 for insurance coverage for a total monthly median housing expense of $770 last year, according to the league survey.

At the two extremes, the median monthly housing expense in San Francisco was $1,370 compared with $673 in Pittsburgh.

Following in alphabetical order are the 46 metropolitan areas included in the league's study with the median sales price followed by the median monthly housing expense:

Bloomington-Normal, Ill., $55,900, $668; Boston, $126,000, $1,166; Bremerton, Wah., $83,500, $853; Chicago, $87,000, $882; Cincinnati, $55,300, $626.

Picking a laundry detergent

By the Editors of Consumers Reports

Ask a dozen people which laundry detergent they prefer, and you're liable to get 12 different answers. Part of the reason may be attributed to the barrage of advertising for the many products available. And some people may use a particular brand because it was the one their mother or father used.

To see if any one detergent actually did remove stains better than another, Consumer Reports' chemists put 11 major detergents with various formulations through the ringer — both in the laundry and in the lab.

White polyester-cotton shirts, soiled from normal wear, were laundered in each detergent. While the detergents all cleaned lightly soiled areas competently, they all proved hit or miss on collars and cuffs, which stayed soiled on about 40 percent of the shirts, no matter which detergent was used.

For lab tests, Consumer Reports used a rigorous procedure recently developed in association with the American Society for Testing and Materials. Major differences between detergents emerged.

Measured amounts of 10 hard-to-wash stains — blood, chocolate syrup, spaghetti sauce, grass, mud, grape juice, makeup, tea, ballpoint-pen ink and used motor oil — were each carefully applied to one of 2,000 swatches of material.

After the swatches were washed, the stains were examined closely. Nearly all of the detergents were able to remove the blood stains, but some were better at it than others. Even the least effective products did a good job of removing blood from polyester-cotton swatches.

A few products had minor problems removing the chocolate syrup from the nylon swatches tested, but most did a very good job.

Many of the detergents had a harder time removing commercial spaghetti sauce. They left a food-oil stain on polyester-cotton — the kind of greasy spot you often find on dark-colored polyester blend tablecloths. The rest of the test stains proved to be even more of a challenge for most of the detergents.

Of the products tested, Liquid Tide did the best job. It performed well in most of the difficult stain tests. The chemists found its bottle handy with its broad base that doesn't easily tip over and its drip-free spout.

When your home turns 15...raise the roof!

By The Associated Press

It's probably time to raise the roof, if your home has celebrated its 15th birthday.

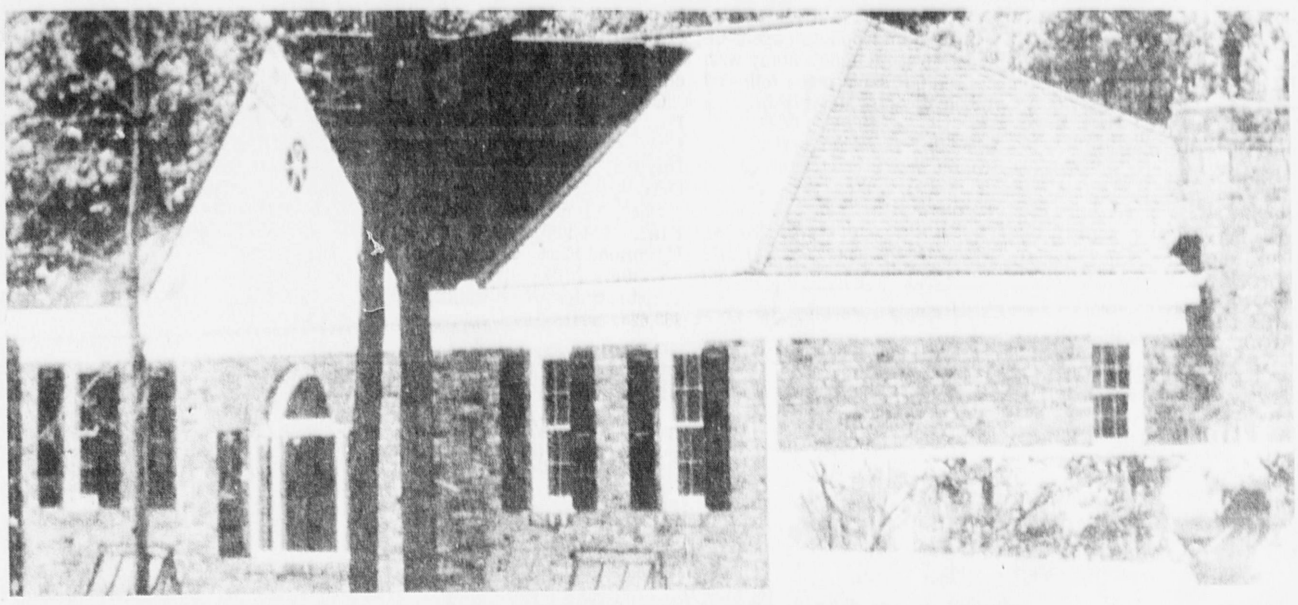

One way to give it new life — and fire resistance — is with reinforced asphalt shingles.

An estimated eight out of 10 homeowners who are building new homes or reroofing choose asphalt shingles, most reinforced with fiberglass, according to Edward Haney, fiberglass marketing manager for PPG Industries.

The fiberglass makes shingles fire resistant, he says, adding that they "will not easily ignite, readily spread flames or emit burning embers that could contribute to the spread of a fire.

How can you tell if your home needs a new roof?

"Shingles should be replaced if they are curled and blistered, worn or torn on ridges and in valleys, have nailheads protruding or show patchy color from worn-off ceramic granules," says Haney, who adds that the most prestigious are the new three-dimensional, or multilayered, fiberglass ones.

Fiberglass-reinforced asphalt shingles are fire resistant, provide a long life and are easy to maintain. AP photo.

"You can give your roof a rugged, distinctive appearance with three-dimensional fiberglass shingles.

"These shingles are thicker and layered and create deep shadow lines that enhance a home's appearance.

"A roof of three-dimensional shingles adds to a home's curb appeal and value when selling it."

In choosing the shingles, Haney advises, the first consideration should be the weight, remembering that the heavier the shingle, the longer its life.

The extra weight is mostly asphalt, and 280 to 350 pounds-per-square products can offer up to 10 years to the life of a roof, he says.

Asphalt shingles usually have an approximate weight of 215 to 350 pounds per square, with a square equalling the number of shingles that will cover 100 square feet of roof.

To determine the number of shingles needed, calculate the total square footage to be covered, add 10 percent for error and then divide by 100. This gives the number of squares of shingles needed. A typical 1,000-square-foot roof requires 11 squares.

Haney points out that shingles are packaged in bundles — with three, four or five bundles per square, depending on shingle weight — and if shingles are to be transported to a job site, it is important to know the number of bundles.

Like many specialities, roofing has a jargon all its own:

Hip — the inclined external angle where two sloping roof planes meet.

Ridge — the uppermost, horizontal external angle where two sloping roof planes meet.

Valley — the internal angle where two sloping roofs meet.

Flashing — the metal or roll roofing used to prevent water seepage around any intersection or projection in a roof, such as vent pipes, chimneys, adjoining walls, dormers or valleys.

Asphalt shingle product lines usually include hip and ridge shingles designed to fit neatly over the triangular points where two roof planes intersect.

Slo-Flo kit reduces plant watering usage

By The Associated Press

A plant watering system developed in Israel to cope with irrigation problems in barren stretches of desert is helping homeowners take care of their plants in the United States.

Called slow flow, or drip irrigation, the system can reduce the amount of water used by as much as 50 percent.

New do-it-yourself kits from several manufacturers make it possible for homeowners to adapt this technology. True Temper Slo-Flo kits, for example, come in three different configurations for specific applications — landscaping, patios and vegetable gardens.

The kits snap together and hook up to an outside water tap. Timers can be added.

Tools needed for assembly are a tape measure for determining lengths of tubing, and a pair of scissors or a knife for cutting tubing. No adhesives are required.

First, a drawing should be made showing lawns, gardens and plantings with rough distances and including an outline of your house with available faucets. Next, determine how best to serve each specific area.

Landscaping that contains needled plantings and flowers, for example, should be provided a very fine, steady spray of water.

For gardens and planters, water should be dripped slowly at the base of plantings, allowing the ground to absorb every drop. To meet these needs, some kits contain perforated tubing and small "dripper" nozzles for planters.

Installation should be started at the faucet, where a filter screen and flow regulator is inserted into a hose connector. If required by local law, an anti-siphon device may have to be added.

The supply hose either can be permanently buried or laid across the ground.

The landscape kit comes with 80 feet of half-inch poly tubing and with two elbows and "T" connectors to provide additional flexibility in designing a watering system. Each kit also contains 12 half-circle sprayers that will each cover a six-foot radius and 12 full-circle sprayers that each cover a 12-foot radius.

There are 20 "risers" in each kit, used to support each spray nozzle whether the water line has been buried or not. Each riser is pushed into the poly tubing at the point where a spray is desired, and threaded into a snug fit. They don't leak. A spray nozzle is then screwed into the top of the riser.

For vegetable gardens, straight "T" and elbow conectors are provided to lay out the watering system without kinking the ½-inch poly water supply tubing.

The "T" fittings are installed at the end of each row of plantings and an irrigation tape, which only allows water to seep out, is stretched the length of each row.

Patio kits provide quarter-inch poly tubing with "T" fittings to channel water from the main supply to individual plantings or pots. Gang fittings can be used to increase the number of water lines used in a specific area, such as one that has four or five hanging planters.

The poly tubing can be stapled to walls and other structures, and spikes hold it firmly into the soil. "Drippers" pushed into the end of each tube dispense water at the rate of a half-gallon an hour.

Vallely winds up scouting career

Vallely was brought into Cleveland in 1972 by owner-President Gabe Paul, General Manager Phil Seghi and Farm Director Bob Quinn, to fill the role as scouting supervisor.

Jack had worked as New England scout for the Philadelphia Phillies, Cincinnati Reds and New York Mets before joining Cleveland. He held a similar position with the Oakland Athletics.

The former St. Mary's High of Waltham athlete was the youngest scout ever signed to a major league payroll — a record that still stands today. Over the years, Jack has sent a number of players up to the big leagues.

Among his latest proteges was Rich Thompson, a 6-5, 225-pound righthanded pitcher he signed out of Huntington Station, Long Island. Last year, Thompson led all Cleveland pitchers by appearing in 57 major league games.

Also, Cory Snyder, ticketed to play in the Cleveland outfield this year, is a product of Brigham Young University who was signed out of Harwich in the Cape Cod League in 1984.

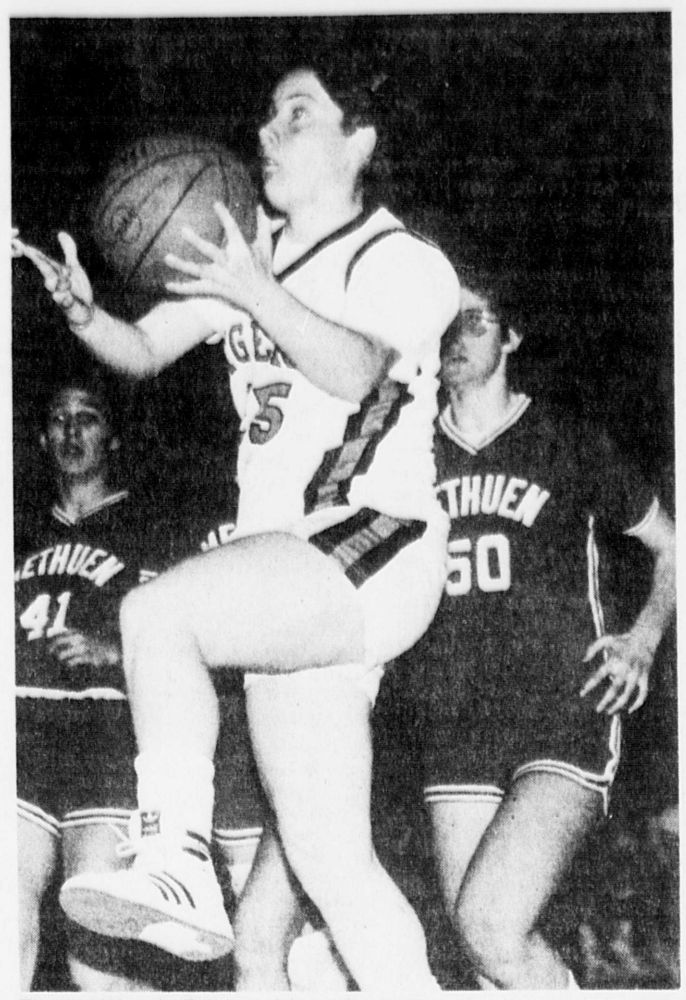

On the local season, Waltham High outfielder Al Cosgrove (6-5, 220) was signed by Vallely in 1962 when he was working for the Cincinnati Reds. Cosgrove reached the major league plateau twice but didn't stick.

Jack will begin his 39th year as head baseball coach at Curry College this spring with his son Brian as assistant coach and chieft talent scout. He has had 34 winning seasons and had had only four losing years. His Curry College teams have won 565 games, lost 153 and tied 1. Last summer, Jack signed Curry catcher "Buzz" Franzen to a Cleveland contract.

In announcing his retirement Vallely stated:

"I gave it much thought and decided not to go into another spring training camp. Baseball has been good to me over the years. I scouted all over this country, plus the Mexican League, Dominican Republic and Puerto Rico League. I scouted major league clubs for trades and for World Series reports when the clubs I worked for were involved in the World Series. I did it all.

It is now time to concentrate on continuing the baseball tradition at Curry College."

Methuen denies North girls

By David Cuddy
Sports Correspondent

WALTHAM — They knocked on the door for three solid quarters, those Methuen Rangers, and when they finally crossed the threshold into the black, the Eastern Mass. Championship was theirs via a 61-53 victory over Newton North.

North took the lead eight seconds into this Eastern Mass. girls' basketball championship thriller Tuesday night at Brandeis' Shapiro Athletic Center, and the Tigers would hold the edge for three and a half quarters before their northern opponents made their move.

When Methuen grabbed the advantage four minutes into the fourth, there was no stopping the towering Rangers. North trailed by three with 55 seconds left when the intentional fouling started and the Ranger followers began to chant.

Newton North bowed out of the tournament with a 21-2 record.

"Determination, courage, heart...that's my starting five," said Tiger coach Irene Cucina after the loss. "They don't give up."

Methuen showed the same amount of character, holding close to the quick but smaller Tigers. The Rangers trailed by eight entering the final frame but ran off 10 straight points to start the period, thus erasing the deficit.

Darlene Orlando, Methuen's 6-3 giant center, scored six points during the table-turning run, including the go-ahead hoop with four minutes to play.

Following a Karen Zraket game-tying jumper, Orlando pulled down a Newton miss, dished it ahead to Zraket, then got the pass back and took it inside for a 47-45 Methuen lead.

Ann Meng broke the scoring run with one free throw, cutting the sudden Tiger disadvantage to one before the Rangers ran off six straight to take a 53-46 edge with 2:15 left.

Despite a top-of-the-key jumper and a solo free throw from Wendy Rogers, Newton North could not get back into the game. The Rangers had stolen the momentum and were not about to give it up.

"Coming into the game, we knew they (Newton North) were going to press but we weren't playing well against it (in the first half)," said Methuen coach Mimi Hyde-Stott. "We buried ourselves."

In the fourth though, Hyde-Stott noticed the resurgance of Orlando, and Methuen bet the book on the Ranger center.

Orlando scored 19 points, 11 in the fourth quarter, and cleared 10 rebounds in the game, most of those in the final frame also.

"Darlene came on in the fourth," Hyde-Stott said. "She was forcing the ball in the first half so I pulled her."

Orlando is one of four six-footers on the Ranger squad, but surprisingly, Methuen did not capitalize on the height advantage until the second half.

"Newton was burning us on the boards in the first half," Hyde-Stott said. "Instead of boxing out, we were going for position, and they were killing us."

Carol Ventura, Newton North's 5-10 senior, played the thorn in Methuen's side in the first two periods. The senior forward outrebounded the towering Methuen front line, sometime getting two or three offense rebounds in a row.

Even 5-4 Robin Silver was standing up to the oversized Methuen forwards. At one point in the first quarter, Silver stood her ground on a driving Orlando. The senior guard took the blocking foul, but made sure her Methuen opponents knew she would not back down.

Meng gave the Tigers the lead to start the game, and after Methuen tied the score at two-all and four-all, Newton North ran off nine straight points to grab a 13-4 edge with 4:12 left in the first quarter.

Meng had six in that run while Ventura added a steal and a layup.

Methuen cut the lead to three, 13-10, but a five-point binge by Newton to close out the quarter gave the Tigers an 18-10 advantage.

Behind nine points by Richardson off the bench, Methuen crawled back into the contest, trailing by three at the half, 30-27.

The teams would trade hoops for most of the third quarter, until the Tigers rattled the Rangers with a seven-point run to close the period. Leading by one, 38-37 with 2:40 left, North got a hoop from Rogers before the junior point guard finished off a three-point play with 1:52 left, putting the Tigers on top, 43-37.

Then, with 13 seconds left in the third quarter, Silver took a Meng steal in on the hoop, heard the footsteps of 6-0 Debbie Richardson on her heels, and smartly dropped a pass behind her back to a rushing Ventura, who layed it home for a 45-37 lead.

Just as suddenly as Newton North had rattled Methuen, the Rangers rattled the Tigers to open the fourth with the 10-0 scoring surge.

After the game, Cucina expressed her disappointment with the officiating and the closed-in atmosphere at Shapiro Athletic Center.

"They (the officials) can't run with these high school girls," she said. "We were getting position on Methuen, and they were reaching over us. The officials were out of position."

Cucina said that because of the noise from the stands, the players could not hear the coaches calling the plays in. Several times during the game, play had to be stopped because the officials could not hear the instructions from the scoring table.

The Weston Swim Club boys team won the New England Championship, outdistancing the second place team by an impressive 700 points.

Lions bid adieu to K. Antonellis

It's been a long time coming but Newton South girls' basketball coach Mark Aronson can look forward to an experienced crew returning for next season. But, with every dose of good news comes a spoonful of bad news.

Aronson loses three seniors from this season's tournament quarterfinalsts, and one of them is the franchise. Senior Katrina Antonellis stayed just long enough at South High to break every conceivable school record, but it's time for the four-time all star to move on.

"It'll be the first time that I have experience coming back, but when you lose a player like Katrina, you never know just how important the loss will be," said Aronson. "You never know how the girls are going to play without her and you wonder who's going to step in and replace her."

While it's still early to speculate, Aronson has a good idea which one of his three returning starters will carry the load. Junior Cheryl Williams was second on the team behind Antonellis in scoring, and right now the 5-4 forward-guard is number-one on Aronson's list.

"The pressure's on Cheryl," admitted Aronson. "Her role will change. I'm going to need 15 to 20 points a game from her, and occasionally I'll need her to have those 20-25 point games."

This winter, Williams pumped home an average of 10 points a game in addition to her 10 rebounds and three blocked shots an outing, but Aronson said the junior will have to shoot more next season.

"She's a reluctant shooter and she's going to have to change that," Aronson said. "She's got as much talent as any player around, but she's got to go after that potential."

Williams will share the captain honors with seniors-to-be Kristann Wilmore and Jen Lerman.

Wilmore, at 5-7, is one of the taller girls on next year's squad and is expected to crash the boards as she did this season. What Aronson needs from the junior forward is more points.

"Kristann's got some pressure on her too, because she'll have to score some points," Aronson said. "She's made great improvements though. A year ago, she was a non-player."

Lerman, Aronson's recent 110 Percent Award winner, can play both the point guard and the off guard equally well. The coach said Lerman should have an "outstanding" senior year and is confident the 5-1 guard will be a key.

"She'll provide excellent leadership for us and she'll be a tough player defensively," he said. "She's improved — she's reworked her shot and she can dribble with either hand — and she's a more mature player."

That maturity, which Aronson sees in several of his returners, will be the key next season. The coach admitted to being surprised that this year's crop did so well, qualifying for the State Tournament and winning two games, but there is a different feeling as he looks ahead to winter '87-88.

"Katrina was always the scoring star, but next year we're going to have different people coming up with the 10 and 15 point games," Aronson said. "We'll rely on pressure, defensive turnovers, and pushing the ball upcourt. If the kids work hard and come into preseason hungry, I think we'll do all right."

Aronson said the Dual County League looks as strong as ever with Boston Latin losing just one starter.

Junior Dede Hill should be one of those players who, in any given game, can pour home the 10 to 12 points. Aronson said she has an excellent shot and an aggressive style, but she has got to work on her game.

Sophomore "Pookie" Wilson had an up-and-down second season but came on strong in the playoffs. Against Duxbury, the diminutive point guard scored seven points and handed out seven assists.

"She's got to be aggressive on offense and she's got to cause the turnovers on defense," Aronson said of Wilson. "Next year is make-it or break-it for Pookie. She could be one of the best players in the league if she develops and plays consistent ball. She has got an unlimited potential."

Five-foot-10 junior Jen Roser came off the bench this season and, according to Aronson, anything she did was considered an extra.

"Jen had the luxury of being a bonus player, anything she did was a bonus, but she's going to be expected to contribute next year," Aronson said.

A strong defender and rebounder, Roser has the potential to average 12 points and 12 rebounds each time out.

Another big girl, sophomore Lucy Ketterer, was the biggest surprise this season, emerging as a valuable substitute.

"I really didn't expect her to play one minute all season," the coach said. "She proved to be an intelligent player. She's always in position defensively, she's aggressive, and she's just now developing an offensive game. We just need more of the same from Lucy and she'll become a great leader before she's done."

Junior Kathy McBride rounds out the list of returners. Although the 5-4 guard did not see much action with the varsity, she did practice each day with them and knows the routine.

Freshman Kim Cohen is expected to challenge for a spot on the varsity, and Aronson speeks highly of the 5-4 ninth grader.

"She's got an excellent game sense," he said. "She's got good instincts, always makes the right move, and can stick her jumper."

Jenny Ketterer, Lucy's older sister, was a "solidifying force" on Meg Stewart's junior varsity squad, and Aronson said the 5-5 junior has a shot at making the varsity.

Aside from Antonellis, Aronson loses seniors Sheilla Coleman and Tammy Barone.

Coleman, South's defensive expert, was the recipient of the coach's 1986 Defensive Player of the Year Award.

"It's the first time I gave an award like that," Aronson said. "Sheila is a real hard worker. In a sense, basketball is not her sport — she was kind of out of element — but she worked it out with hustle and a desire to suceed."

Antonellis, Dorf earn special South honors

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The Boosters' Club presents 110 Percent Awards at every Newton South High sports night, but Tuesday the club, fans, coaches and athletes had a couple of very special citations to applaud. Both were rarities, going to senior athletes for accomplishments way above and beyond the norm.

One of those trophies capped the evening and drew a standing ovation for its recipient. The audience repaid Katrina Antonellis for some of the pleasure she has given them on the basketball court for four years after the senior was presented with a special Boosters' Club Trophy for becoming the school's all-time leading scorer. With her 1436 points, Antonellis is the top scorer, male or female, in the history of the school.

"She's an outstanding person," said Coach Mark Aronson as he presented the award. "She's always willing to do a little bit extra."

Antonellis has gotten plenty of attention in her time at South, but another athlete has labored a bit out of the spotlight. Still, Whitney Dorf earned some pretty impressive honors himself.

Boys' gymnastics coach Tom Steeves presented the senior with the Outstanding Gymnast Award, only the third time that trophy has ever been handed out. In order to be eligible, a gymnast must qualify for the State Meet in the all-around.

Dorf finished 15th in that event in the state, taking seventh in the vault and 14th on the high bar.

Those trophies helped capped a winter season that was one of South's most successful ever. It included an unusual number of teams and individuals who not only qualified for post-season tournaments, but did well once they got there.

Participation was up as well. Some 265 athletes participated in the program this winter, 175 on the varsity level.

All 11 teams honored one of their own with the Boosters' 110 percent Award, with many of the coaches remarking upon the difficulty of choosing one athlete among so many deserving candidates.

Fittingly enough, Antonellis served as the master of ceremonies for the combined portion of the program. (After the Boosters' Awards were given, the teams retreated to individual rooms for their own awards ceremonies.)

Aronson had the honor of wrapping up the show with his presentation of the special award to his senior star. That came shortly after he had named Jennifer Lerman as his 110 Percent winner. The coach cited Lerman for her constant desire to get better, rather than getting down when she didn't get to start early in her career.

Those two players contributed to a great season which saw the Lions rebound from a 1-4 start to win 11 of their last 14, including their last four, to get into the tournament on the final day. They then proceeded to beat Sandwich and Duxbury before finally bowing to number one seed North Attleboro.

"All my players played to their potential," said the coach.

Aronson was preceded by his counterpart on the boys' team, Joe Killilea. That club also made the tourney, defeating Weymouth South before losing to, again the number one seed, New Bedford.

Killilea's choice for the 110 Percent Award out of that group was forward Rohan Henry. The coach called it "the hardest choice I've ever had to make. The team worked unbelievably hard."

But Henry finally won out, because he "did whatever he was asked," said Killilea. "He went silently about his job the entire season."

The coach, whose team loses only four seniors to graduation, made special mention of the program's sub-varsity teams, which combined for a 28-0 record. The junior varsity team went 18-0, a school record, under Harry McShane, while Ed Aronson's freshman unit went 10-0.

The boys' gymnastics team didn't have the team success of the basketball squads, but there were several bright spots.

Dorf was one of course, but the 110 Percent Award winner, Dave Albert, was another. Steeves singled him out for his dedication: "He made every practice whether he was hurting or not."

Steeves also announced next year's captains, Dave Bensinger, Dave Kalis and Ron Mark.

Coach Chuck Hurwitz' wrestling team also had a lot of success, despite coming from the smallest school in Division 1, as he pointed out. The Lions lost six matches by one bout, and wound up winning 223 bouts and losing only 140. With only two starters graduating, that should add up to a bright future.

Hurwitz was one of the coaches who stressed how difficult it was to choose among a number of wrestlers who "did a lot of work." But Adam Gabriel, he said, "did that and more," thus earning the 110 Percent Award.

The coach also cited his All-Stars, Matt Malone and Ron Vachon, and announced next winter's tri-captains: Brad Walk, Vachon and John Hillis.

Ken Frieze won top honors for the ski team. Coach Toby Abend, who doubles as the Boosters' Club president, cited him for "giving the extra effort to get the other kids motivated." Frieze was a four-year competitor for the Lions.

Abend called the season a "building" one for South. The highlight was provided by freshman Saundra Green, who represented the school in the State Meet and was named to the league's All-Star team. Debbie Frieze was an honorable mention in the latter category.

Another freshman, Marc Broudy, was a standout for the swim team, finishing 13th in the breaststroke in the State Meet. The 110 Percent Award, however, went to Co-captain Adam Murphy, who "dedicated himself to swimming," according to Coach Scott Pohlman. "He improved his times tremendously."

Broudy and Murphy joined Steve Goldberg and Doug Karp on the All-Star medley relay squad.

The 110 Percent Award for the girls' gymnastics team went to that club's only senior, Leora Bloch. The four-year competitor was an All-Star in the balance beam.

Coach Chris Omeltchenko presented the winners for both the boys' and girls' track teams. Allyson DeRensis won the 110 Percent Award for the girls, for what the coach called "an incredible job. She improved tremendously. No one knows how much it meant to the team."

Robert Weiner was the boys' winner for being the type of competitor "any coach would love to have. He's the hardest worker on the team," said Omeltchenko. The boys finished fourth in the Dual County League, their best standing since 1978.

The hockey team suffered through a disappointing year, but returns 12 players so things should improve. The biggest bright spot for the Lions was defenseman Judd Cohen, whom Coach Charlie Rezzuti called "the hardest hitter in the league," when introducing him as the 110 Percent Award winner.

Rezzuti announced Dan Monbouquette as next year's captain, with Peter Rosbeck as the alternate.

Lanciloti, Fabian share top Tiger mat award

NEWTON — Scott Lanciloti and Scott Fabian shared the Outstanding Wrestler honors when the Newton North team held its annual breakup party on Monday at Lanciloti's home.

Lanciloti, the senior co-captain, posted a 24-4-1 record for the Tigers, who finished the season with a 4-16 record. That marks a clear improvement over last season's 1-14 mark.

The 157-pounder's dual-meet record was 18-1-1, and he finished second in the sectionals. At the State Meet, Lanciloti won his first match, then lost to Brockton's Gary Kruskall in the final five seconds. He won one more (a pin in 17 seconds) before being eliminated.

Fabian won the award in his freshman year with a 24-6-1 record at 100 pounds. He was 16-2-1 in dual-meet action and won the Belmont Tournament. Fabian finished fifth in the sectional and got a chance to wrestle in the states when the sectional champ didn't make weight. He won one match before bowing out.

Those two provided most of the highlights for the Tigers this season, though Coach Steve Parker said he was "pleased" with the season. What makes him just as happy as the improvement the club showed is the fact that all the starters are coming back except for two seniors.

Brian Claflin was named the Most Improved Wrestler.

"His improvement could be seen by anybody who watched our matches through the year," said Parker. "He started out trying to muscle everyone, but learned a lot of moves."

Claflin was a true 169-pounder who wrestled at 187, the result of a ripple effect from Lanciloti at 157. Parker called a 4-3 loss to Newton South's John Hillis one of Claflin's most "outstanding" matches. Claflin was forced to miss the sectionals due to illness.

The Effort Award was presented to Anthony Filippone. Another wrestler who was bumped up, Filippone took on bigger opponents at 169 when his best weight was probably 157.

John Joseph picked up the junior varsity's version of the Effort Award. He was called up several times to the varsity during the season to fill in at 107 or 114 and did well enough to earn a letter as a freshman.

Finally, Ed Lin and Filippone shared the Dave Constanzo Scholarship Award. Presented in memory of the Tiger wrestler who was killed in a car accident after his senior year, the scholarship sends an outstanding underclassmen to a summer wrestling camp.

Last year Lanciloti won it and the extra work paid off in his senior season.

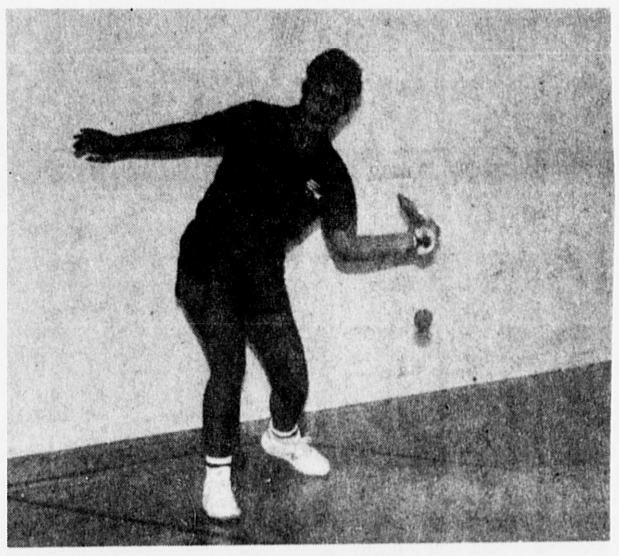

Lin, Filippone and Bill Mazzetti were elected tri-captains for next winter. For Lin, it will be his second stint as captain.

Women's Open State racquetball champion Janet Burke

Burke evens score for racquetball title

Janet Burke of Newton defeated an old nemesis to secure her first Women's Open Massachusetts racquetball championship lastd weekend.

Meeting Judy Bryant in the finals on Sunday at Cambridge, Judy won convincingly in two straight games, 15-7, 15-7, to finally climb to the number one spot in the state.

Janet, a 17-year-old senior at Newton North High School, has been making steady progress in the past five years in state tournaments and is the youngest woman to capture the title in Massachusetts.

In 1981, she played in the Novice Division and won the third spot. In 1982, she played in the Women's B Division, coming in second in a tiebreaker. A year later, Janet competed in the Women's A Division, winning her first Woman's state title in addition to her four Junior state titles.

The following two years she paid her dues in the state tournaments and could not breeak through the quarterfinals. This year, she was able to put it all together and took the crown handily.

After a six-month absence Janet has won four local tournaments while preparing for the State Championships. She is looking forward to a busy season with the regionals fast approaching, the Nationals in Houston, Texas and the Junior Nationals in Chicago.

Mishkan Tefila finishes hoop season unbeaten

ALLSTON — A one-point victory over Maimonides enabled Temple Mishkan Tefila to remained undefeated going into the United Youth Synagogue League basketball playoffs.

With their 56-55 decision over the host club at the West End House on Sunday, the Cougars ran their record to 15-0. They open the playoffs at the Brimmer and May Gym in Brookline against Peabody on Wednesday at 7:30 p.m.

Mishkan Tefila's perfect record was seriously in danger throughout, particularly when a lackluster defensive effort left them behind by four at the half, 31-27.

That trend continued into the third quarter, and with less than two minutes to go, the Cougars were still behind by five.

Things finally turned around in the next seven minutes, when Mishkan Tefila outscored the M-Cats by nine to open up a four-point lead. Rich Freeman sparked the surge with seven points, while John Aronie added six and Dick Rubin five.

Though it wound up as a one-point game, it was Mishkan Tefila that controlled the ball down the stretch, and Maimonides never had the chance for a gamewinning shot.

Mishkan Tefila shot out to a 16-8 lead to start the game, as Todd Groman scored eight of his team-high 15 points in the first quarter. But Maimonides fought back to outscore the visitors, 8-2, in the last two minutes of the first quarter, then opened up an eight-point lead in the second.

The summary:

MISHKAN TEFILA(56)-Aronie 5-2-12, Freeman 3-4-10, Groman 7-1-15, Kaplan 3-0-6, Rubin 5-2-12 Schwartz 0-1-1. Tot. 23-10-56.

MAIMONIDES(55)-Shefitz 9-2-20, Katz 1-0-2, Weglin 4-1-9, Perlmutter 1-0-2, Adler 3-0-6, Feldman 4-1-9, Drapkin 1-1-3, Goldberg 0-2-2, Haas 1-0-2. Tot 24-7-55.

Investments and tax-free income

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

I understand that a number of investments — aside from municipal bonds — provide tax free income. Can you mention some of these, and explain how they might generate tax free income.

R.G., Brookline

Dear R.G.:

It's a good idea to diversify your tax free holdings. Some of the investments you refer to not only provide a higher yield than municipal bonds — they also provide a greater potential hedge against inflation because they are equity investments.

Municipal bond interest is tax free for a simple reason — the federal government levies no tax on investments issued by state-municipal governments. All other investments that provide tax-free income do so by offsetting tax benefits against revenues.

Take real estate, for example. If you buy a real estate income limited partnership, you end up being a partner in the ownership of a piece of real estate. As an investment, it generally has a depreciable life of 18 years, and this depreciation provides a tax writeoff to the owners of the proerty. At the same time, the tenant pays rent, most of which is also passed on to the owners. This income remains partially tax free, but only to the extent that it is offset by depreciation.

The same principal applies in equipment leasing partnerships. Instead of purchasing real estate as in the previous example, these partnerships buy equipment (computers or transportation vehicles, for example) which they then lease to corporations. The equipment, like real estate, can be depreciated over a number of years, and therefore provides a tax benefit to limited partners. Leased out under contract, the equipment generates lease income for the partners and because of the tax benefits, the income is at least partially tax free.

A third kind of "tax free" income is generated by oil and gas income limited partnerships. Here, the same principal applies, except that instead of depreciation, we have depletion. The depletion allowance reflects the fact that an oil well really does have a limited life (in contrast to a piece of real estate, which one may depreciate even though the property may be in excellent condition).

A percenttage of the oil pumped out of the ground is seen for tax purposes as a return of capital.

A passion for her Borgward

By Cyra McFadden
San Francisco Examiner

Add to your list of "women who love too much," the San Francisco publicist Jinx Hone, an otherwise rational person with a hopeless passion for her car.

"Brunhilde" is a white Borgward, an Isabella Sports Coupe with what her owner calls "art deco, siren lines," a red and white leather interior and a gleaming, chromium grill. Ms. Hone bought her (she never calls Brunhilde "it") in 1961. Since then the car's cost her so much money, she could be driving a Rolls-Royce Corniche.

The Borgward lives in a rent-controlled garage in Pacific Heights. "She's always had her own apartment." Once a week, she gets lovingly hand-washed and rubbed down: no car-washes. "Recycled water on THAT FACE?" In the line of duty, she's carted Omar Sharif, Yves Montand, Pierre Salinger and Gay Talese around town.

Not only did they all fall in love with her, Ms. Hone claims, but "young men who've never seen one before throw their bodies on the hood, screaming that they have to have her." The woman in the driver's seat smiles sweetly and tells them it's a package deal. Where Brunhilde goes, she goes — if she could arrange it, all the way to a common grave.

Fresh out of school, on "the grand tour of Europe," Ms. Hone saw her first Borgward parked in front of the Hotel Splendide in Brussels. Heart palpitations and a rush of blood to her girlish cheeks. She got on a train next day for Bremen, Germany, and "Herr Borgward's immaculate factory."

What won her heart was the car's "sexy, independent, platinum-blonde persona," says Ms. Hone, who fits the same description minus the "platinum." "Jean Harlow would have killed for her." Twenty-five years later, she's still Brunhilde's love slave, the passive partner in automotive bondage.

The car went out of production shortly after Ms. Hone bought hers. Borgward mechanics are as rare as unicorns, Midas doesn't stock mufflers and parts have to come from Babylon, Long Island, where the last extant supplier rebuilds brake cylinders in his home garage. "Sometimes I think they have to be shipped from the jungles of the Yucatan."

Desperate, she "once bought a fender from a man in Las Vegas who hinted that he's a retired Mafia bag man. He mentioned the Bonnano family a lot." David Niven was in tow, book touring, when the fender arrived, shipped by Greyhound bus. Publicist and client picked up the coffin-sized crate in a rented stretch limo, with Niven and a helpful crew of winos doing the loading.

Another driver had bashed Brunhilde. Ms. Hone had hysterics and has yet to forgive the cop who did the accident report. "Do you know what he asked me? 'Where are you going to get parts for that Studebaker?'"

She can't understand such soullessness. How could anyone mistake her "timeless design classic" for a Detroit iron? Think of a car as the means of getting between point A and point B? Drive a Honda Civic, like her longtime male friend, who was content with a Volkswagen until the door on the driver's side fell off?

The man dreads riding with her. "He knows that if anything happens, I'll cry my eyes out." He urges her to trade the Borgward for more sensible transportation. He doesn't press the point because "he knows that he's No. 2." If Ms. Hone had to choose between him and her current mechanic, there's no doubt how she'd jump. "This one's from Turin, but he's a genius. He understands her German soul."

So Giovanni Lenci maintains Brunhilde, supplanting a mechanic who moved to India. Ms. Hone had promised this one she'd leave the car to him in her will. "I'm so healthy, though, he got tired of waiting." Yet another victim of the chromium-plated vamp — a little long in the tires but still breaking hearts and her owner's bank account.

Ms. Hone says there are about 30 Borgwards left in the United States — or rather, "30 still running."

Which compact car is tops?

(NEA)— When the Toyota Camry first appeared in showrooms, the auto engineers at Consumer Reports tested and rated it tops among compacts. Since then, they've found little reason to change their opinion and have graded the 1986 Camry excellent in performance and reliability.

A four-door Camry LE hatchback was tested recently, along with other compact cars — including the Oldsmobile Calais. Standard equipment on the LE — which lists for $11,808 — includes a 2-liter four, overdrive automatic transmission, power steering and brakes, stereo radio and rear-window defroster.

Adding air conditioning, power windows and locks, aluminum wheels, cruise control, power sunroof, cassette player with equalizer and an anti-theft alarm raised the price to $15,261, including destination charge

The Camry started and ran flawlessly, and shifted smoothly. Fuel economy averaged 29 miles-per-gallon, best among the four cars tested. While the LE was somewhat sluggish in emergency maneuvers, it was always stable and controllable. Braking was excellent. Safety and seating comfort received generally high marks, and the bumpers sustained no damage in the engineers' basher test.

Although the Camry is a fine car, the engineers suggest that anyone over 5-foot-10 stay away from the hatchback, especially with sunroof. The sedan has more headroom.

The four-door Calais Supreme tested lists for $9,883 with a 2.5 liter four, power steering and brakes, and stereo radio, all standard.

Adding automatic transmission, power windows, rear-window defroster, air conditioning, cruise control and aluminum wheels raised the price to $12,443 including destination charge.

The engineers said the Calais tested quite well. It performed roughly on a par with the imports in acceleration, handling and ride, and was quiet for a car its size. Fuel economy averaged about 26 mpg. However, its brakes were worse than those on the other tested compacts, and rear-seating comfort was judged inferior.

In bashing tests, the Calais' front bumper was dented badly and the estimate for replacing it came to $205. The rear bumper was dented slightly and could be repaired for about $112.

The Calais has been on the market for only one year. The repair record for the four-cylinder models has generally been average, but reliability of the V6s has been much-worse-than-average.

Pine Manor College to create writing chair

CHESTNUT HILL — Rosemary Ashby, president of Pine Manor College, has announced plans to establish the Josephine Abercrombie Chair in Writing, through the generosity of a grant of $500,000 from the J.S. Abercrombie Foundation of Houston, Texas.

The grant, made in the form of a challenge, requires Pine Manor to raise an additional $250,000 to form a permanent $750,000 endowment for programs which will develop strong writing skills across the curriculum of this independent liberal arts college for 550 women in Chestnut Hill.

President Ashby emphasized the college's commitment to good writing as a skill that transcends specific subject areas, and encourages the thinking process in all disciplines.

Abercrombie, a well-known Houston business woman with interests in manufacturing, thoroughbred race horses, real estate and boxing, has emphasized the importance of good writing skills in all areas of problem-solving.

The inspiration behind Pine Manor's grant, she was cited recently for her prominence in "breaking ground for women in non-traditional fields." She is a graduate of Rice University and Pine Manor College, and currently serves as vice chairman of the Board of Directors at Rice.

An act of faith

By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

NONANTUM — It is so modest in appearance that you could drive by it every day for years and never notice it, but the little, square synagogue on Adams Street is a monument to the faith and determination of the city's very first Jewish settlers.

Begun in 1912, Temple Agudas Achim Anshei Sfard, better known as Agudas Achim and even better known as "the Adams Street Shul," was an eloquent announcement that the city's small Jewish contingent had arrived.

Press reports of the laying of the temple's cornerstone in July, 1912, stated, "Now, feeling stronger and their unity of purpose being fixed, the Hebrew residents of Newton have decided to erect a synagogue, the first in Newton, where their religious life may be cemented and its future assured.

"In carrying out this purpose," the report continued, "a great financial hardship is being undergone by each individual concerned, yet with high hopes and implicit trust in the community in which they reside, complete success in this undertaking is assured."

Previous to the construction of the temple, Nonantum's Jews, who mingled freely with the original Irish, French-Canadian and Italian residents of the village, met in each others' homes to worship. Recollections of the congregation's older members note that it was often difficult to assemble the minyan, a quorum of ten adult males, necessary to conduct services. On high holy days, the congregation would often rent Lafayette Hall on Dalby Street, the original

Officials claim he represented self as president

New Coogan conflict cited

By Ed Cafasso
Staff Writer

NEWTON - Two NYNEX officials say Timothy C. Coogan represented himself as the president of a Waltham telecommunications firm while he was a municipal employee acting on behalf of the Greater Boston Police Council (GBPC), headquartered in the Newton Police Station.

The company Coogan said he headed - Acticom Inc., of 191 High St., Waltham - was at the time and still is under contract to maintain two-way radios for city of Newton, a GBPC member and its "host community."

The possibility that Coogan had a financial interest in the Newton contract may provide a new twist to the conflict of interest allegations lodged against him by lawyers representing the GBPC.

If Coogan can be corporately linked with Acticom or its predecessor, Ackerman Communications of Waltham, during the time he worked for the GBPC, ethical questions could be raised about whether the 38-year-old Sudbury resident reaped private financial gain from his public employment.

Ackerman had a GBPC contract to install and maintain police radios from 1981 to Sept. 1, 1984. In addition, since 1981, the company has held a series of one-year contracts to maintain radio equipment for Newton, primarily for the city's public works fleet.

Assistant City Solicitor Ouida Young said Ackerman requested the corporate name of his firm be changed to Acticom, Inc., effective Jan. 1, 1985. The city's current pact with the company expires on June 30.

The NYNEX officials say Coogan, who left the GBPC in June 1985, represented himself as president of Acticom during the first nine months of 1984.

At the time, a team from NYNEX Mobile Communications corporate headquarters in New York was considering whether to make the company an authorized agent to market its cellular telephone products beginning on Jan. 1, 1985.

"John Ackerman is the owner of Acticom now, as far as I understand," said Peter Harrigan, area sales manager for NYNEX Mobile. "When we brought them on, Tim Coogan was the president of the company."

He said Coogan held the post until sometime "not long before October of 1984."According to James Robertiello, general manager of public relations for NYNEX Mobile, Acticom became an authorized NYNEX agent in October 1984 in anticipation of NYNEX's official entry into the Boston cellular telephone market at the start of 1985.

Residents escape plane tragedy

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayo Larkin, Geoffrey Larkin and Frank Bridges did not have a boring weekend.

The three of them walked away from a plane crash last Saturday near Laconia, N.H., with minor injuries. No broken bones, but a pretty good story to tell at the office.

Mayo Larkin, 69, of Newton Centre, has been flying planes since he was a bomber pilot in World War II. He also is an architect. His 37-year-old son, Geoffrey, of Needham, is a real estate developer and Frank Bridges, 38, of Newton Centre, is a lawyer. Bridges was taking his first ride in a small plane.

They went out to Hanscom Field in Bedford and flew Mayo's single-engine Beechcraft Bonanza up to the White Mountains to look at some land for a possible development venture.

Mayo also is now thinking about buying a new plane. This was his third Beechcraft and he said he considers them "the Cadillac of airplanes."

Interviewed by telephone from his home, Mayo Larkin said the crash was caused by "catastrophic engine failure." He said it appeared a rod inside the engine punctured the crankcase, causing the engine to lose its oil.

The Federal Aviation Administration is investigating the crash in an effort to determine what caused the engine trouble.

The three men had left Twin Mountain Airport and were headed back to Hanscom Field when the trouble began.

"I had a rough engine and I started losing oil pressure," said Larkin. "It was dark out and large, fiery sparks were coming out of the engine. The engine began to vibrate and oil was squirting out of it, covering the windshield and windows on the left side of the plane."

Visibility was non-existent. "It was like flying in an envelope," he said.

Pasta for the masses

By Lauren McFalls
Assistant News Editor

What do marathoners eat the night before a big race? Before this year's Boston Marathon, they'll be eating fresh pasta, served up both hot and cold by a Newton Highlands firm — Abruzzi Companies.

The organization, which is relatively unknown in the pasta world, beat out the larger Prince and Ronzoni pasta firms to win the distinction of official food supplier for the marathon, said Melissa Bankoff, vice president in charge of personnel for Abruzzi's, who coordinated the company's push for the food supplier position.

"It was a shot in the dark," said owner Mario Boccabella. "Apparently, this is the sort of thing everybody wants a part of," adds Bankoff. "When Prince approached (marathon organizers) this year, they were told to take a walk," she said, because "they were asked to do it last year, but declined."

And "Nestles wanted to enter into it, but (organizers) couldn't figure out a way to work in chocolate," Bankoff said.

Abruzzi, however, won the position through persistence and a good idea. Boccabella said he figured that since the marathon was going through changes in sponsorship, organizers would be interested in a fresh new pasta company to supply the food.

Plus, "Fresh pasta is the thing today," said Bocabella. It cooks faster than other

Irate man pickets police

By Maureen Azzato

NEWTON — He paced back and forth in front of the police station, alone, bearing a sign that said, "No support for police creeps that block traffic."

The traffic-blocking police and firefighters' picket recently at Newton Corner brought this Charlestown man to exercise extreme measures.

"I'm not even from Newton, but last week I got so aggravated being tied up in traffic that I didn't know what else to do," Erik Anderson said. "I've never done anything like this in my life."

Anderson said the police and firefighter's hypocrisy is the most aggravating aspect of their plight.

"You know that if I went in the middle of the street and blocked traffic, there would be immediate police response to my disruptive behavior, but for them, it's another story," he said.

Anderson was on his way to an appointment when he got tied up in the traffic jam. Due to the picketing, he never made it.

"I'm a photographer, and I had an appointment for a session which I lost money on because I never got there," he said. "How dare they intrude on someone's private life, using police powers to protect them?"

The union grievances are not even an issue, Anderson said.

"Who knows if their arguments even have merit, and at this point, who cares?" "We all have grievances," he said. "There are always two sides to every story."

He picketed the station for four hours, withstanding rebuke from several police officers and support from people driving by, Anderson said.

Cops threaten trash picket

By Les Orsini

NEWTON — Having carried their plea to Newton Corner a second time, firefighters and police may block trash trucks at the Rumsford Avenue transfer haul station next time if they cannot settle their 21-month-long contract dispute with the city.

One picketer among the estimated 175 marchers offered this glimpse into the future as they circled Newton Corner in the stinging, late afternoon cold last week.

He held a sign saying "Newton Corner Today, Trash Trucks Tomorrow."

The officer, who declined to identify himself, said police and firefighters may disrupt the city's trash removal operations by picketing the transfer haul station where trucks deposit collected rubbish.

"It could be next week," said Newton Police Association (NPA) president Lynda Glenn. "Anything's possible."

Newton Corner traffic was backed up once again.

Representatives of both unions have said they are considering picketing the Boston Marathon to draw nationwide attention to their plight.

Both police and firefighter unions have been without a contractual agreement for just under two years.

Last week's informational picket backed up vehicles on Exit 17 of the Massachusetts Turnpike again and snarled traffic where the off-ramp joins Washington Street.

"I realize a lot of them (motorists) are going to be inconvenienced," said Newton

Mayor only dissenter in school budget vote

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Mayor Theodore D. Mann cast the lone dissenting vote Monday night as the School Committee approved a $46.4 million budget proposal for fiscal 1987.

Mann is scheduled to present the city's budget for next year — which includes School Department costs — to the Board of Alderman March 31.

The mayor said he would comment on school officials' "fiscally irresponsible budget" at that time.

The budget represents a $2.4 million increase over last year, the second-highest hike in 10 years. School Superintendent John Strand termed staff salary increases the "largest single cause of the budgetary increase."

Mann criticized the School Committee for including one-time state funds from the 1985 Education Reform Bill in the most recent teacher salary agreement.

"I think it's irresponsible to vote on wage adjustments based on state money," Mann said.

The city must replace the state funds if the Legislature does not renew them two years from now.

School Committee Chairman Leonard Gentile said Mann usually abstains from voting on such issues. But the chairman added he was not surprised by the mayor's action.

"I guess it was his way of being very clear, to indicate to us how he feels the budget is higher than the city can afford," he said.

According to Gentile, next year's budget is an attempt to make up for previous years' cuts in building maintenance, equipment purchases, and other areas.

Based on the mayor's vote, the chairman said he would not be surprised if the school budget was cut significantly, creating the need for some renegotiations.

Strand said two cost reductions would offset part of next year's budgetary increases, the closing of Bigelow Junior High School and the reduction of 17.05 classroom teacher positions, due to declining enrollment.

Combined, those net savings amount to almost $1 million, according to the department's budget report.

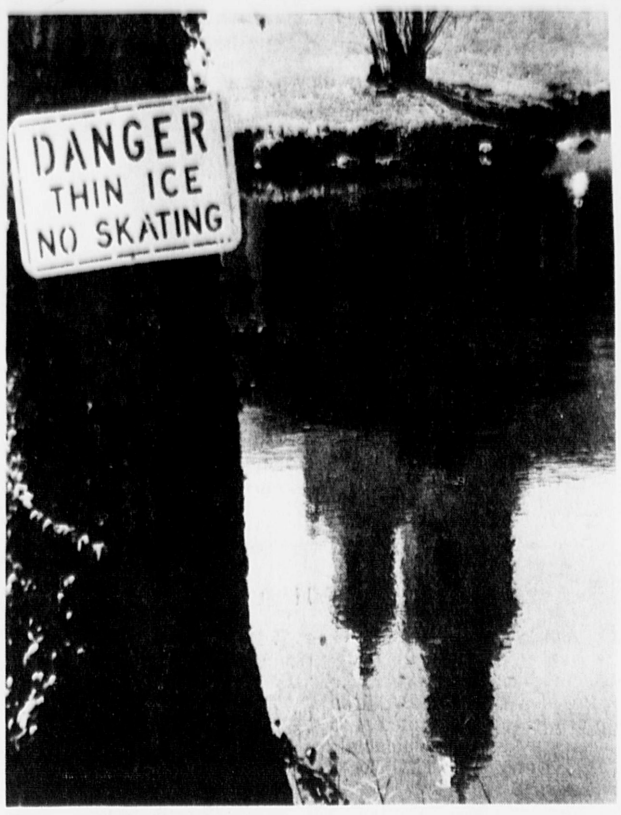

Furthermore, the department expects to save about $100,000 in fuel costs, due to falling oil prices.

Despite these savings, Gentile said, annual inflation and salary increases are factors beyond the committee's control.

"I think every single item on the budget can be justified," he said.

Today, the department is expected to send the approved budget to the mayor for scrutiny and possible bottom-line cuts. The budget then goes to the alderman for further adjustments.

According to Gentile, the alderman do not have the power to replace money the mayor cuts, but they can make further budget reductions. The aldermen will vote on the school budget May 15.

home of the Church of St. Jean L'Evangeliste.

The rich history of the city's first synagogue is the subject of an exhibit which opens at the Jackson Homestead, on Washington Street, April 6. According to Duscha Scott, director of the Homestead, the display of old pictures, momentoes and memoirs is the result of more than a year's work. Much of the detective work involved chasing down resources that were all but lost to the passage of time.

Thelma Fleishman and Melinda Bluestain, an anthropologist and a convert to Judaism, were responsible for the bulk of the research that led up to the exhibit, according to Scott. The real significance of the exhibit, she said, is to be found in the fact that it preserves a piece of the city's history which might have been lost otherwise. "All this is new information that didn't exist a year ago," she said. "You are drawing a picture of the community. That's the real exciting part."

She said the Homestead has been fortunate in being able to contact many of the present members of the congregation who have lent old photographs, documents and artifacts for the exhibit. The work of Newton photographers Steve Rosenthal, Georgia Litwack and Brigitta Ralston will also be on display.

The work of the Homestead staff will insure that the names of the pioneer Jewish families will be included in the history of the Garden City. The devotion of families named Katz, Gilfix, Silverman, Swartz, Fox, Perlmutter, Hoffman, Fried and the others, who poured their hard-earned savings into the simple, little temple on Adams Street, will now be etched in the city's memoirs for all to see.

Nominations sought for rights award

NEWTON — The Newton Human Rights Commission continues to invite nominations for its second annual Human Rights Award. The commission, which expects to present the award in June, has set April 1 as the final deadline for nominations.

Information and nomination forms can be obtained by contacting Jana Sax, Department of Human Services, Newton City Hall, telephone 552-7170.

The Human Rights Award is designed to recognize an individual who, by his or her efforts, has improved the quality of life by promoting greater understanding and appreciation among people regardless of race, color, religious creed, national origin, sex, age, handicap, sexual preference, or ancestry.

The award also is designed to recognize an individual who has worked for the elimination of discrimination in such areas as education, employment, and housing.

The recipient may be a Newton resident. He or she may also be a non-Newton resident, provided the recipients' efforts in Newton are the basis for the award. The award is not for efforts made in the course of an indivdual's employment, but for work outside the scope of his or her job.

City to pay $25,000 for drowning death

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — The city has agreed to a $25,000 settlement in the case of a 35-year-old Newton man, who drowned seven years ago while on a Recreation Department swimming trip with 29 youngsters.

Kenneth Lightman, who suffered from a mild learning disability, died on Aug. 10, 1978 at a state-supervised swimming area in Natick's Lake Cochituate, according to Assistant City Solicitor G. Michael Peirce.

At the time of his tragic death, Lightman was well known around the city, especially among youngsters from the Cabot Park Playground, Recreation Department employees and the Newton North High School football squad.

On that summer day, Lightman had difficulty swimming and two youngsters in the water near him alerted a lifeguard, according to a report of the aldermanic Finance Committee.

A Recreation Department counselor and lifeguards could not locate Lightman, then cleared the swimming area about 20 minutes later, the report says.

They recovered Lightman, could not revive him and he was pronounced dead on arrival at a hospital, the report says.

His father, Gabriel Lightman of 117 Norwood Ave., sued the the city and state for negligence on Feb. 13, 1981.

Since the city sponsored the trip and the state provided lifeguards and ran the swimming area, "it was a dual responsibility," Peirce said.

The Recreation Department did not have have a "formalized buddy system" back then and there was around one instructor per 10 field trip participants, the Finance Committee report indicates.

"Would a buddy system have saved him? It's one of the things you can't know," said Peirce.

Because of Lightman's disability, the city had to receive written permission from his parents before allowing the man to attend the trip, Peirce reported last September.

The Board of Aldermen approved Newton's settlement figure last week. The state has agreed to settle for $20,000, the Finance Committee report says.

NNHS in decathalon finals

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Excitement and tension builds for the Newton North Academic Decathalon Team as they prepare for the national finals April 3 in Los Angeles.

The team won the state finals in February, but there has not been as much time to prepare for the nationals as there was did for the state competition, according to Newton North Principal Marya Levenson.

"They were all so prepared for the other competition and since then, they've been concentrating on their school work," Levenson said. "Now we're trying to plan how to get back into the momentum of the competition."

Team member Mark Chao said the competition would be "one long, miserable day."

"I enjoy competing and I don't mind all the work involved," Chao said. "I think it's fun. It's worth a lot more to me than my school work because it's independent work. We've learned about stuff most kids don't learn until college."

The team received outside help from Brandeis and Harvard university professors in areas of economics, World War II history, and advanced sciences. The crash courses gave the team direction, but for the most part, the subjects were self-taught, Levenson said.

Each team member will take six multiple-choice written exams in social science, literature, mathematics, fine arts, economics, and science.

"They will end up with an individual and a team score after these written tests," Levenson said. "They can be recognized for both their individual and team achievement."

The team scored 42,000 points of a possible 60,000, receiving about 80 medals at the state competition, she said.

A two-minute impromptu speech and a prepared speech on immigration will be delivered by each team member to a panel of judges, who will interview them later on an individual basis. Each member also will be given a half hour to write an essay.

Finally, the team is pulled together to compete in the Super Quiz against all the other teams. The questions are projected on a screen and the teams have five seconds to answer them.

The most unique feature about the competition is students from every level of scholastic achievement can qualify, Levenson said.

"I like the competition because it doesn't only focus on the super-achievers," she said. "There are three categories of A, B, and C students who compete, and two from each category are on the team. No one is left out."

Funds donated by Honeywell, the school department and the Newton Parent-Teacher-Student Association made it possible for the team to travel to California for the competition. The team needed $3,500 to make the trip.

Woman killed in Rte. 128 tragedy

NEWTON — A 23-year-old Westwood woman was killed Friday when she was hit by a tractor trailer on Route 128 after she left the Newton-Wellesley Hospital, according to State Police.

Christine Walls began to run southbound on the northbound lane and stepped onto the highway just as a Newton officer rushed towards her, State Police spokesman Sgt. James C. Sartori said Friday.

The hospital had notified Newton police that Walls was a walk-away from its day care unit and an officer and a Newton-Wellesley ambulance crew spotted her on the Route 128 northbound ramp around 12:38 p.m., Sartori said.

A car carrier struck Walls and threw her approximately 130 feet towards the second and third lane, Sartori said. Dr. William Soybel, Middlesex County medical examinier, pronounced her dead of multiple internal injuries at the site of the accident, said Sartori.

The woman had been awaiting admission at the hospital when she left for a walk about 11:30 a.m., said Newton-Wellesley spokesman Rigney Cunningham.

The hospital notified the Police Department shortly after it was discovered Walls had left the hospital grounds, he said.

Walls had been receiving outpatient care at the hospital, but he could not reveal the nature of her treatment, Cunningham said.

Thomas Walls, father of the accident victim, said his daughter was a business student at Framingham State College, but declined to make any further comment.

The driver of the truck, a 31-year old Townsend man, has not been cited for any motor vehicle violations, Sartori said. He said he could not foresee any new evidence that would cause him to be cited later.

"You have to feel bad for both parties," Satori said. "It's a double tragedy."

The accident closed down 2½ lanes on Route 128 for about an hour, Sartori said.

Cash stolen from North High vault

NEWTON — More than $1,000 in cash and a check for almost $700 were stolen out of a vault in the main office of Newton North High School sometime last Wednesday night or early Thursday morning.

Police said there were no signs of forced entry into the walk-in vault, leading them to believe that the crime was committed by someone who knew the combination to the vault or that the vault was not secured Wednesday evening.

Marya Levenson, principal of Newton North, said a secretary in the main office told her the vault was locked when she left Wednesday evening.

Levenson said the check and cash were the only things in the vault that were disturbed. She said the school also stores audio-visual equipment in the vault.

The stolen check, for the amount of $696, was written by Carol Corbett to cover her costs for a French foreign exchange program in which her daughter is planning to take part. Corbett, who stopped payment on the check, said she felt security at the school is inadequate.

On Christmas eve, someone broke into the school, turned on many of the water faucets and left them running. Not long after that, an arson fire in a locker room caused extensive damage.

Levenson said the School Committee has been looking into the possibility of installing burglar alarms in schools throughout the city.

ZBA sued to make house lot buildable

CAMBRIDGE — The executor of a Newton estate and a realty trust are suing the Newton Zoning Board of Appeals (ZBA) in an effort to have a lot located at 25 Rolling Way declared buildable.

The suit was filed in Middlesex County Superior Court by attorneys Peter L. Pusiloski and Susan A. Hartnett on behalf of Simon Love, executor of the estate of Ruth W. Levins, and Alexander J. MacKenzie, Trustee of A.J. MacKenzie Realty Trust.

It names as defendants the ZBA, Steven and Harriet Buchbinder of 19 Rolling Way, and David E. Stein and Wendy Shearn of 33 High Rock Terrace.

According to the suit, MacKenzie and Love entered into a purchase and sales agreement on Oct. 11, 1985 under which MacKenzie agreed to buy lot 47a at 25 Rolling Way, subject to obtaining a building permit.

The suit contends that a valid building permit was issued to MacKenzie Realty Trust and to Anthony R. Proia last Nov. 21.

On Dec. 17, Shearn and Buchbinder appealed the granting of the building permit to the ZBA, which sustained their appeal on a 4-1 vote, invalidating the permit.

The plaintiffs are asking the court to overturn the ZBA's decision and to declare the permit valid.

According to a copy of the ZBA's decision, the site, which consists of 7,370 square feet, does not meet the minimum requirements of a buildable lot in Newton's residence C district because it has less than 7,500 square feet.

Joyal retires as Health Dept. head

NEWTON — Health Commissioner Bernice Joyal plans to step down in August after serving the Garden City in that capacity for six years.

Joyal, 62, says she intends to retire and settle down in her West Newton home. "I may do something part-time in my retirement, but it won't be in the health field," she says.

Joyal came to the Newton Health Department after serving as regional director for the Massachusetts Department of Public Health. Before that, she was a nursing consultant for the Public Health Department.

Joyal earned her basic nursing degree at NewtonWellesley Hospital and earned her master's in nursing and education from Boston University.

She says she is looking forward to retirement.

"If I wasn't ready," she says, "I wouldn't do it. I am not going to stay with the health profession any longer."

Mayor Theodore Mann lauded Joyal's work.

"Bernice Joyal is an outstanding leader and I am very sorry to see her go," he says. "She is leaving us with a top grade organization and she will help us in determining the way we go for the future. She has served us well."

Neither Mann nor Joyal could say who the new health commissioner might be.

"I have no idea," Joyal says of her eventual successor.

"We shall be advertising very shortly," Mann says.

Mann says Joyal's replacement, whoever he or she is, has large shoes to fill.

Restaurant agrees to pay back taxes

NEWTON — The Boston Fish House restaurant on Needham Street paid $17,000 in delinquent payroll taxes and agreed to pay another $16,000 the next day in order to avoid having all the money the restaurant takes in turned over to the state.

The state Department of Employment Security (DES) issued a "keeper attachment" against the restaurant last week. If the restaurant had not agreed to pay the back taxes, the department could have stationed at the cash register a representative from the Middlesex County sheriff's office who could collect all the money from customers' bills until the $33,000 debt were paid.

Listo Fisher, a spokesman for the DES, said his department has worked since 1982 to collect the taxes from Peter J. White Inc., the corporation that owns the Boston Fish House. Despite the DES's attempts to set up a voluntary repayment agreement, White had paid only $3,000 of the amount owed, according to Fisher.

Runner not worried by marathon picket plans

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — There are people in this city who support police and firefighters, and there are people who support the mayor. With public safety officers saying they will picket the Boston Marathon if the 21-month-old labor dispute is not settled, Alderman Paul Daley finds himself in a sticky situation. His brother Edward is a Garden City firefighter and he is a marathon runner.

"I don't think it will add to the race-day atmosphere," Daley says of a possible protest. "I really don't know if detracts from it, though. It is very hard for me to say. I have to do a lot of soul searching because I am solidly behind the police and firefighters, but I am also a big racing fan as well."

Daley, who has raced "all over the world," says many groups and individuals use marathons to get their message across.

"There are so many groups that use their own form of demonstration to express their message," he says. "During the New York Marathon, you have the Hari Krishnas trying to get their message out. In a sense, what the Hari Krishnas did is not that out of line with what the police and firefighters would do during the Boston Marathon."

Through discussions with union leaders and rank and file members, including his brother, Daley says the safety officers would rather not have to protest during the race but will if there is no agreement.

"When the announcement was made that the firefighters and police would make their presence felt, if need be, marthon day, naturally I wanted to know what, where, when and how, especially where Brookline police were involved in a form of demonstration in the past."

Daley says that Brookline police blocked traffic and police efforts during the race two years ago, adding that local officers assured him their protest would not be as intense.

"They have told me they have respect for the race and would not slow down traffic or anything like that," he says. "All they want to do is show up en masse, maybe in uniform and make their presence known before the cameras and to the press. This will be a world-wide event with a lot of publicity and they want to make the most of that opportunity. They assured me there would be no crossing of roadways and that everything will be done in an orderly fashion."

From a runner's perspective, Daley says he would not notice any signs.

"First of all," he says, "as a runner, by the time I got to Newton I would be too tired to notice the signs. Also, the streets are littered with all kinds of signs cheering people on and what not. The only sign I look for is the Citgo sign after crossing the bridge because that lets me know where I am."

Jewels & Gems
BY CAROL THE GOLD LADY
THAT FAMILIAR
The fit of a ring is almost as important as a well-made setting. A ring that is too loose may fall off one's finger. One that is too snug may be difficult to get on and off. Making sure that the ring fits at the time of purchase is not enough. One should take into account whether or not one's fingers have a tendency to swell in warm weather. If they do swell, one may wish to consider a slightly larger ring on which a ring guard can be placed. A ring guard also is preferable for rings with narrow backs. a wide ring is more difficult to fit with a guard. However, it also is less apt to slip off or around the finger.
Don't take chances when you make a jewelry investment by having an improper fit. Make sure you come to CAROL "THE GOLD LADY" at 109 Dalby St., just off Watertown St., Newton to select jewelry that looks as well on you as it fits. We don't sell you pieces if we feel you will not be able to wear them comfortably. Our aim is to show you quality pieces, have you purchase them and then come back to see us for all your gift giving needs. Let us show you how we create beauty with custom designed pieces of jewelry. No public interest in school budget

We are, quite frankly, appalled that not one single citizen turned out last week for a public hearing on Newton Superintendent of Schools Dr. John Strand's latest budget proposal.

We are a bit taken aback by the budget proposal itself. In a time of declining enrollment, when the city is closing yet another school, it is difficult to understand why the School Department's budget keeps growing and growing. It is even more difficult to understand why, in the midst of savings incurred by closing schools, the budget keeps going up at such an alarming rate.

Preliminary figures have the latest budget pegged at something like $46.4 million — a 5.5 percent increase over last year's. As astounding as that figure appears in the era of Proposition 2½, we suspect that the hike over last year's budget is actually considerably larger.

We are eagerly anticipating aldermanic and mayoral review of the latest school budget proposal. Hopefully, those reviews will whittle down some of the more obvious excesses. On the other hand, if there are no real excesses, we are looking forward to a coherent explanation of why we need more and more money to teach fewer students in fewer facilities.

Hopefully, Dr. Strand and his staff will have answers for the questions they are bound to field from the aldermen and the mayor. A lot tougher question deals with citizen input into the workings of the department that gets the largest single chunk of the city's $100 million-plus annual budget.

When it comes time to close a school, the meeting rooms are packed, the blood is hot, the rhetoric is rampant and frustrated parents give their children an excellent example of how adults are not supposed to negotiate their grievances. Later, when School Department heads produce a budget that overlooks the obvious and misses the spirit of tax cap legislation by a mile, you could hear a pin drop.

It would seem more appropriate if some of the energy dissipated during the school closing debates were spread around more evenly throughout the year.

School Committee members were recently embarrassed by a notice from the District Attorney's office that chided them for repeated violations of the Open Meeting Law. If the DA had happened to drop in on the five-minute public hearing on a $46 million budget and noticed how little Garden City residents care about how their tax dollars are spent, he might wonder why we bother with an Open Meeting Law.

A license to litigate needs limitations

Everyone is suit-minded in an increasingly litigious society. How true this is could be seen in a recent financial journal advertisement by a lawyer seeking new business. He was ready, willing and evidently qualified to go to court for a citizen with a notion to claim damages. There were eight areas specified where an aggrieved client could undertake due process.

Call these counselors at law latter day ambulance chasers, if you will, but the big jury awards and generous out-of-court settlements in some cases apparently are tempting enough to fill civil court dockets.

Ample evidence supports the notion that the situation is out of hand. Insurance premiums are soaring. In the area of medical malpractice, which is getting most of the attention, doctors in high-risk specialization are withdrawing from practice or shifting to no risk contacts. But the problem goes far beyond the health care practitioners.

National firms dealing in all kinds of consumer goods are being hit hard by suits. Auto accidents, environmental hazards, work conditions, state and city government situations dealing with persons or property are all part of the total picture. Huge jumps in insurance premiums for all segments of society are causing a national wave of tort law reform actions.

Before the Massachusetts legislature is a whole flock of bills dealing with the subject. Malpractice suit control is on the front burner. Others deal with public employee liability. Newton Rep. A. Joseph DeNucci introduced H-3757, which would establish a special commission to come up with recommendations for changes to prevent or diminish suits against police and municipalities. The DeNucci bill has merit. Much more can be done, reaching beyond the public sector.

Limits on settlements are a principal focus, aimed at putting a handle on premium charges. A further goal should be to establish guidelines that zero in on suits that are frivolous, based more on greed than fact. While the risk factor is an intangible in health care, notably in surgery, there, too, it could be possible to establish criteria making the medical profession less vulnerable while protecting the patient's interests.

Here is a national crisis affecting all of America's citizens, young or old. We would consider it an American Bar Association and an American Medical Association mandate for constructive change.

SATs: unfair, useless ... a con job

By Chuck Stone

By my calendar, spring is at hand. But by another index, spring's arrival is trumpeted by more dramatic rites: the first robin, the opening of baseball camps, the college-student hegira to sunshine and moonshine, and college admission letters of acceptance.

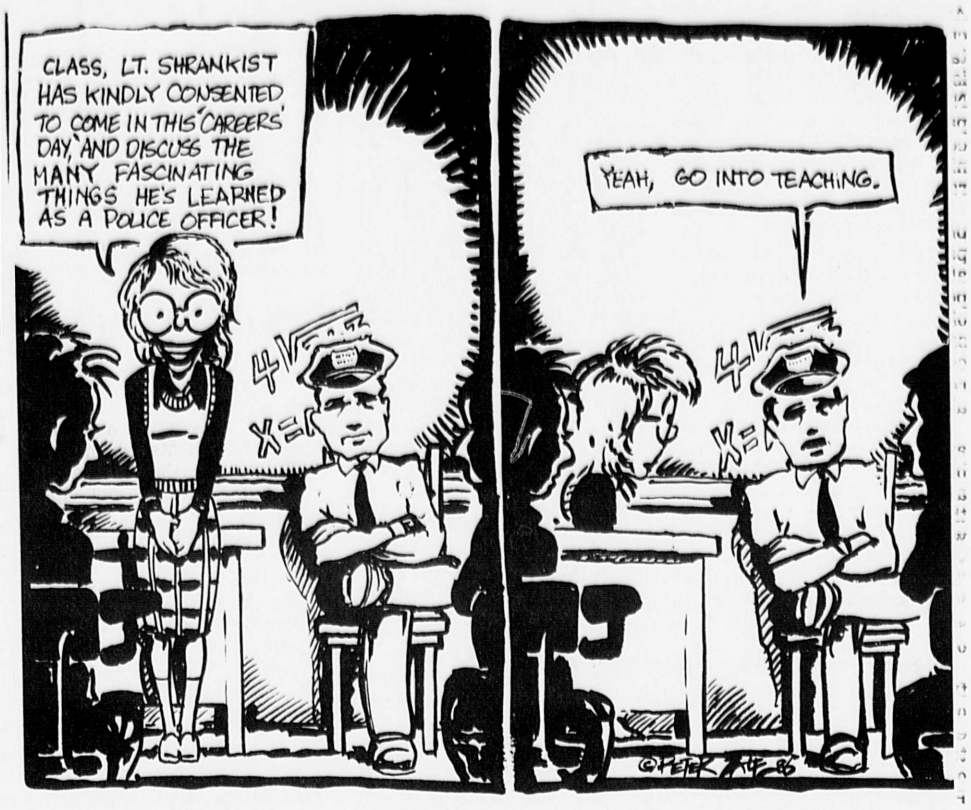

Those springtime letters result directly from one of the rites of fall — "the Saturday afternoon massacre," when more than 1.5 million high school students take college admissions tests.

"Saturday afternoon massacre" is exquisitely metaphorical. The nation's "testing mafia" makes students an offer they can't refuse: take an admissions test or forsake a career. Students meekly comply, knowing they may be wiped out by the multiple-choice gang and be denied entrance to the college of their choice.

At least they are granted two options for self-destruction: the Scholastic Aptitude Test, known as SAT, or the American College Testing Program, ACT. But the SAT exudes the most prestige. It's owned by the Educational Testing Service, the psychometric godfather of the testing mafia. Educational Testing Service controls more standardized tests than Ferdinand Marcos has embroidered white shirts.

Several weeks ago, the annual rites of SAT-mania were complicated by Secretary of Education William Bennett. His release of the nation's test scores revealed that New Hampshire, Oregon and Vermont rank the highest, while Georgia, North Carolina and South Carolina lie at the bottom of the SAT barrel. But what does all this ranking by SATs and ACTs mean? Absolutely nothing. It's like believing you can predict China's population growth by measuring the relationship between the birth rate and annual precipitation index.

Fitting present for the Duke

Mayor Theodore Mann thanked Governor Michael Dukakis for taking the time to address a meeting of the Massachusetts Municipal Association last weekend and made an oblique reference to the amount of local aid the Duke gave the City of Newton aid this year with a gift.

The mayor presented the gov with a "free ticket" to be used at Exit 17 on the Mass. Pike. Of course, Exit 17, at Newton Corner, is the only exit on the pike without a toll.

After the presentation, a Statehouse guard leaned over to a reporter and commented, "A lot of good that'll do him with the police picketing the place."

"I take the Green Line myself," was the gov's only rejoinder.

At the same MMA meeting, Mayor Mann introduced Senator John F. Kerry as "a former Newton resident ... He left when the taxes got too heavy for him."

Later in the meeting, Mann introduced Amy Anthony as being in charge of economic affairs for the governor's office. "So, if you want to have an economic affair, I think she's capable," he commented.

Aldermen sick to death of staring at their shoes or their dockets through long committee meetings, take heart. Lovely Ouida Young has returned to the city's Law Department and will, once again, be making regular appearances at night meetings to guide lawmakers through the labyrinth of legalese that so often stymies them.

After six months in private practice, most of it spent wading through documents relating appellate tax cases, Young jumped at the chance to fill a position left open with Ann Hanson left the Law Department. "I just love night meetings," she said, explaining that her father was mayor of a small town in Ohio and that she grew up thinking nothing of the fact that he had to leave the house at 7:30 every night.

During an often heated discussion over a petition to install a drive-through window at the McDonald's on California St, Alderman Richard McGrath invented his own linkage formula.

"Maybe we should give 10 percent of the hamburgers sold to low- and moderate-income families," he said.

Members of the aldermanic Public Safety and Transporation Committee recently poked fun at committee Chairman Arthur Reilly's lack of hair.

During debate over whether or not Chaulk Ambulance Co. should provide financial information to the Board of Aldermen, Alderman Richard McGrath said if provided, the information would "curl the chairman's hair."

"Yea, all three of them," Alderman Richard Bullwinkle joked, in reference to Reilly's bald pate.

A way to pay for home care

By Richard Rowland

Carol Jones is 88 and lives alone. She was admitted to a hospital with a broken collar bone. She also has hypertensive cardiovascular disease, diabetes and osteoarthritis.

When discharged, she was confused and unable to care for herself. She needed a minimum of two weeks on continuous home health care, monitoring of several medications, and help with normal daily routine.

Under the Diagnosis Related Groups (DRGs), Medicare limits her hospital stay but doesn't pay for the continuous care she needs at home.

The DRG system for paying hospital Medicare bills has come to Massachusetts. Here and elsewhere, people see the growing needs of elders for nursing home and home care after leaving the hospital, yet there is no way to pay for it.

The DRG system pays hospitals a predetermined price based on the average stay for the condition treated. At last, hospitals have an incentive to deliver only what is needed. Keeping people too long costs them money.

Unfortunately, when Congress set the incentives, it forgot to finish the package. Elders leave hospitals when they can go elsewhere. That's good. But they still need care to recuperate "elsewhere," and Medicare won't pay for very much of it. That's bad.

Many elders need a short nursing home stay or nursing visits in their homes. Congress didn't cover it. Senator Heinz (R-Pa.) held Senate hearings on the problem and Barney Frank (D-Mass.) supports House hearings to find a solution.

Until federal policy changes to cover community care, Governor Michael Dukakis has directed that the Executive Office of Elder Affairs use its state-funded home care services to help.

The elder affairs office is working with hospitals, home health agencies and the state's 27 home care corporations to provide care when elders come home under the new DRG system.

Hospitals can help. A General Accounting Office study found that hospital profits in other states have increased substantially under DRGs. Some of these savings should be invested in the care elders need when they leave a hospital.

Massachusetts hospitals have not had enough time or experience with DRGs to make a commitment, but it is happening in other states. A Kansas hospital uses savings to pay for nursing home and home health care. It can happen here too, and St. Luke's Hospital in New Bedford is studying the idea.

Hospitals receive payments for 15 days of care for elders who need surgery for a broken hip. If the patient can spend a week or so in a nursing home and there are no complications, he can be discharged in seven or eight days. Since Medicare doesn't cover the type of nursing home care needed, the hospital uses some of the six or seven day's of savings, $500-$800 of the $2200 saved, to pay for the nursing home care and in-home follow-up.

Other conditions may require short-term services at home following discharge.

Hospital financing is more complicated than this example suggests, but the principle holds. Hospitals cannot use all the savings for this care because some patients will stay longer than the average. Some savings, however, can and should be used to provide this care: to send a nurse, a home health aide, a physical therapist, a homemaker or a home-delivered meal to the elder at home.

This investment makes efficient use of hospitals and medical knowledge. Don't treat people in hospitals if they can recover in a nursing home or at home. At present, DRGs can solve half the problem, and it makes the other half worse.

Hospitals are being criticized for premature discharges and a callous attitude toward elders. Unfortunately, a few examples confirm people's stereotypes.

Most hospitals and doctors make sound decisions to discharge people. Now there is a chance to blend compassion, leadership and good medical practice by using savings to pay for post-hospital care.

Hospitals can improve health care without waiting for the government to order it. There is too much complaining about government interference and regulation and not enough action. Here is a chance to do something worthwhile without government directives.

The Dukakis Administration urges the federal government to make the right changes before too many elders suffer without care.

Massachusetts hospitals have always been in the forefront of innovation and leadership. We hope they will continue that leadership under the DRG system to help finance post-hospital care.

NTA wants 6 percent rebate

The Newton Taxpayers Association has called for a tax cut of six percent in real estate taxes in 1986. "Six percent in '86 is our theme," stated Dr. Ronald Nuttall, president. "Newton this past year had an excess of tax collections of between eight and nine million with the current tax rate."

"Since real estate taxes alone provide about $80 million, our six percent cut would amount to about $4.8 million, or less than 57 percent of the $8.5 million excess of taxes over expenses," Nuttall said. "Per household, a six percent real estate tax cut would reduce the average taxes by about $144 a year."

"When our board unanimously approved this campaign, we had hoped our mayor and aldermen and alderwomen would join us in this effort. To get their answer, we wrote each of them asking, yes or no, would they support our 'Six percent in'86" campaign? While so far no one has absolutley said, "no," to our amazement not one elected official said "yes".

"Because not one elected official seems to think that any part of the eight and one half million excess taxes should be returned to the taxpayers, we are taking our campaign public," asserted Professor Nuttall.

"Why should Newton reduce real estate taxes six percent in '86?" Nuttall presented the following reasons:

1. There was an excess of $8 to $9 million taxes collected last year! This excess shows that there is some amount of money not needed which should be returned to the taxpayers immediately, before the big spenders dream up a thousand new ways to spend all of the rest of our money.
2. Newton has the unpleasant distinction of having just raised the hotel-motel tax on non-voters, estimated to raise about $800,000 per year this in spite of the current excess collection of taxes!
3. The student population in Newton has declined greatly and school costs should be less.
4. The entire population of Newton continues to decline.
5. Water, sewer, and other user fees have increased across the board.
7. Many surplus properties can be leased or sold to tax-paying buyers providing money for capital improvements.

"The Newton Taxpayers Association believes the silent majority of taxpayers in Newton are fed up with elected officials who refuse to return excess tax funds to the people who paid them. The proof that Newton taxpayers are fed up is the fact that thousands of Newton residents willingly signed the state surtax repeal calling for repeal of the obnoxious "temporary" state tax surcharge."

"The same principal applies to Newton's eight and one half million of excess taxation. This money does not belong to elected officials–it is taxpayers money that absolutely should be returned in the form of a six percent tax cut in '86,' according to Nuttall

"Apparently our elected officials need reminding that: THERE IS NO SUCH THING AS GOVERNMENT MONEY-ITS' ALL TAXPAYERS MONEY!"

"To accomplish a six percent real estate tax cut the Newton taxpayers will soon present a group petition to the Newton Board of Alderman," said President Ron Nuttall. "If it is passed we will certainly congratulate our Board of Alderman. But if it is not we intend to gather enough signatures on an initiative petition so the Newton voters and taxpayers can vote on this matter themselves."

Newton taxpayers Executive Director Joseph Alexander summed it up by saying, "We hope our elected officials will pass the six percent tax cut because the taxpayers deserve to get their money back. This will save us the trouble of an initiative petition to get the six percent tax cut on the ballot. However, we've succeeded in getting issues to the voters before, and if our elected officials can't reflect the will of the people, we'll have to go around them again and have the voters pass the tax cut directly."

The Newton Taxpyers Association is a 50-year old organization, the largest of its kind, with over 700 members.

Why 6 percent, you ask?

Why six percent?

That's the question we're asked while almost everyone we approach signs our group petition asking the Aldermen to cut Newton's real estate taxes by 6% in '86.

The answer is that giving the taxpayer that long overdue relief would take only about $4.8 million, which is about half of last year's $8 to 9 million excess of city income over expenses.

The remaining 3 or 4 million dollar surplus would cover a million dollar reserve fund and some good progress on our Newton capital improvement program. Reasonable pay raises for city employees should come from other budget savings.

Voice of the people is heard

To the editor:

The Newton Board of Alderman has decided to adopt a moratorium on industrial and commercial building.

Where conflicting interests land squarely on both sides of the aisle, even contrary views may have merit.

Perhaps an increase in the commercial tax base - which might relieve harried resident taxpayers - prompted some aldermen to campaign against a moratorium. And, perchance, the obscenity of some new brick-and-mortar monstrosities convinced others to say: "Enough is too much; Newton is fast approaching — and bids fair to suprass — the ugliness and choking encroachments which have swallowed up the village atmosphere of neighboring cities and towns."

We are charitably certain that every alderman voted his conscience, and sacrificed vested interest, personal quirks, and philosophical commitment.

What is most encouraging is that, just maybe, the real goad of conscience was the voice of the people who live in this former Garden City. A recent referendum proved clearly that the majority of residents had had a bellyful of entrepreneurial adventures which made a fast buck and savaged a once-beautiful city.

The winds of change may be sifting through the mental machinery of elected officials, elected, incidentally, by the people and for the people.

Officialdom may be on the threshold of realizing that residents are beings who, in addition to feelings, have the God-given ability to think, to weigh, to rationalize, and to decide.

Not long ago, we were astounded to hear an official, resplendent in his majestic superciliousness, hand down the judgment of a modern-day Solomon: "Yes, I am aware that 99 percent of the abutters, and abutters to the abutters, are against the project, but the residents don't know what's good for them."(!!)

One is hard put to quote a better - and more frightening - example of the olympian arrogance and pinnacled egotism of some officials who are enjoying their walk in the clouds because our "ignorant" votes elected them.

Somehow, these come-lately officials have concluded that they rule by divine fiat and not because of people-votes for which they have grubbed.

We may have come full circle, and the voice of the people is beginning to be heard in the land.

Fundraisers should contact vets about Memorial Day

The Newton Veterans' Council wishes to have bands, color guards, mounted patrols, youth organizations, marching units, and veterans organizations who are not participating in Memorial Day activities on Monday, May 26, 1986, and who may be interested in participating in the annual Memorial Day parade within the City of Newton, to contact the council. Parade time is at 1 p.m.

We believe that there may be many such groups or organizations throughout Massachusetts, New Hampshire, Rhode Island and Connecticut that are in need of a fundraising activity on that date and so it is asked that interested group or organizational leaders contact Carl Merrill, parade adjutant, co/ Dept. of Veterans Services, Newton City Hall, Newton Centre, Mass. 02159.

In order to reach interested group leaders we are taking the liberty of utilizing the "Letter To The Editor" column as we recognize that the local media will be supportive of those areas of activity which may be of assistance to local groups. We thank you very much.

pastas because not as much water is absorbed, he said. "Water is not a good thing for runners. They need carbohydrates. That bloated feeling from pasta is from water," he said.

At first, Image Impact, Inc., the firm organizing events connected with the marathon, was not that interested in the Abruzzi Companies. "They thought we'd go away" after finding out 5,000 runners would have to be served, said Bankoff.

Then, after Abruzzi would not go away, Boccabella explained, "It so happened they were looking for someone fresh" because they chose Abruzzi.

Boccabella (which means beautiful mouth in Italian) flashes a wide, mustachioed grin as he lists the volumes of provisions which will be needed to serve the 5,000 runners expected to attend the dinner on the eve of the marathon.

The meal, which will be served amidst the numerous exhibits at the Museum of Science by a separate catering firm, will consist of four pasta dishes — two cold and two hot — salad, rolls and, for dessert, a 4-foot by 8-foot marzipan sneaker.

For the dishes to be served — tortellini in pesto sauce, fusilli in prima vera cold sauce, lasagna and macaroni in marinara sauce — Boccabella will be preparing 3,000 pounds of pasta, 350 gallons of tomato sauce, and 7,000 rolls.

All the food will be prepared at the Abruzzi Cambridge commissary in Fresh Pond because of limited cooking facilities at the museum.

Boccabella immigrated to the United States in 1955, when he and his family settled in Brooklyn, N.Y. A teacher of junior high math, he moved to Newton 10 years ago and opened a delicatessen. Now, with 140 employees, a pasta and sauce factory in Cambridge, a restaurant, a bakery and a deli in Newton Highlands, and another restaurant in Newton Centre, Boccabella says he has enough resources to pull off the marathon dinner.

In fact, when he and Bankoff mentioned the dinner to the staff, "They went crazy," Boccabella said.

Many of his employees not only volunteered to help with the dinner, they will be working the night without pay, he beamed.

NYNEX officials make claims about Coogan

Coogan has said that John Ackerman severed his company's radio contract with the GBPC on Sept. 1, 1984 because he wanted to concentrate on breaking into the cellular telephone business.

Although Coogan has described himself as "an independent contractor" with an office at Acticom's High Street location, Robertiello indicated he had worked for Acticom in a corporate capacity at one time.

"To the best of my knowledge, however, he is no longer with that company," he said.

At around the same time Acticom and NYNEX entered into a multi-year contract, Coogan told Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn, the GBPC's chairman, he would be leaving the council to go into private business.

Quinn has said that Coogan refused to stay with the GBPC because his new job might have constituted a conflict of interest.

Harrigan and Robertiello say numerous aspects of Acticom were intensely scrutinized before the company became one the first four authorized NYNEX Mobile agents in the Worcester-Boston-Providence area. Acticom is now only one of 14 NYNEX agents in the tri-city region.

Robertiello said the firm's finances, credibility, technical experience, marketing capabilities and sales acumen were researched carefully.

Harrigan described Acticom's performance as "most reputable" and "outstanding."

He said Coogan's status with the company "has no bearing" because he "resigned" prior to the creation of the NYNEX franchise.

"As far as we're concerned, they are in good standing. We have no reason to believe they are in anyway implicated in what's happening with the police council," Harrigan added.

Uninjured in plane crash

It was around 6:30 p.m. when Larkin made radio contact with someone from Manchester Airport who had picked up the small plane on radar. He was about seven miles southwest of Laconia and was told to turn back and try to land at an airport there.

"I began to lose altitude fast and I couldn't see out the front or side. The only thing I could do is try to maintain air speed to keep the engine from stalling," he said.

Larkin was a bomber pilot during World War II and was a prisoner of war in Germany. During his years in the military, he had been shot down and once had to crash-land a plane in Belgium.

He said he was too busy trying to land his disabled plane to think about being scared. He did not have the option of bailing out of the plane Saturday because he did not have any parachutes on board.

"I was just trying to keep the plane in an aerodynamic attitude. It was a matter of determining my best logics relationships as to what is available and what options we had — plus a lot of luck.

"We were losing altitude too fast and we came down through some trees," he said. "I had tried to slow the plane as much as I could. I dropped the landing gear to slow it down some more."

When they finally hit the trees, the right wing of the plane caught on something, flipping the plane into a vertical dive position. It came to rest with the engine buried in the ground and the plane's tail sticking up in the air.

Larkin said he was pinned inside the plane momentarily, but that his son and Bridges were able to get out quickly, and then help him get out. Getting clear of a possible explosion was foremost in their minds.

He said it was about five minutes from the time the trouble began to when the plane crashed about three miles away from the Laconia airfield.

His son ran out of the woods toward a road and flagged some passing motorists, who in turn notified police. A rescue team arrived at the crash scene about twenty minutes later and took the three men to Lakes Region General Hospital.

Mayo Larkin required some stitches in his knee, suffered some bruises and some "very sore" ribs. He had no broken bones, nor did his passengers.

Bridges said he had some scrapes and bruises on his ankles and wrists. He said the most painful part of the crash was the tetanus shot he received at the hospital afterward.

Bridges said he really didn't have time to panic.

"I kept waiting for my life to flash before my eyes, but it never did... I had a lot of confidence in Mayo. He did a marvelous job of flying the plane, obviously. He saved our lives."

NOTICE OF MIDYEAR PROGRAM CHANGES TO THE CITY OF NEWTON'S PROGRAM YEARS 7 and 9 (FY82 and FY84) COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM

Federal Community Development Block Grant regulations require that the City make available to the public a description of any additions to, substantial changes to, or cancellation of activities described in Final Statement of Community Development Objectives and Projected Use of Funds. The following is description of activities which substantially changed the City's Final Statements for Program Years 7 and 9 on 14 March 1986 following a pulic hearing held on 23 January 1985.

SUBSTANTIAL CHANGE TO EXISTING FY82 PROGRAM:

82-3(A) - Architectural Barrier Removal - Public Facilities (War Memorial Access) increase of $15,000 from the current budget of $33,215.26 to $48,215.26.

This project calls for the construction of a wheelchair ramp leading to the War Memorial via the Aldermanic Chambers. Recent construction cost estimates of this project have indicated that additional funds are needed, as requested above.

SUBSTANTIAL CHANGE TO EXISTING FY84 PROGRAM:

84-3 - Architectural Barrier Removal - Public Facilities (Newtonville Library Handicapped Accessibility Improvements) increase of $58,646 from the current budget of $25,000 to $83,646.

The present design of this project calls for construction of one handicapped parking space, a lip added to an outside door to make it handicapped accessible, a Garaventa Chair Lift to be located at the accessible entranceway which can carry people up 8 stairs to the main part of the library and down 8 stairs to an intermediate level, a second lift will lead from the intermediate level down 4 stairs to the basement level where the Senior Center and Children's Library are located, and the renovation of the two bathrooms on the intermediate level to make them handicapped accessible.

This project was bid earlier this year and no bids were submitted. The second time this project was bid, the low bidder submitted a bid of $79,000, which far exceeds the current budget for this project.

The above mentioned projects have been identified as priorities by the Mayor's Committee on the Environment of the Handicapped.

If you have any questions or comments, please contact Elisabeth Ruben, Newton Community Development Program, City Hall, 1000 Commonwealth Avenue, 02159 - 552-7135.

PUBLIC HEARING NOTICE
REVISED COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT PLAN FOR NEWTON— FY87 (PROGRAM YEAR 12)
NEWTON PLANNING AND DEVELOPMENT BOARD for discussion at Public Hearing prior to submission to Mayor

2 April 1986, Wednesday
7:30pm
Newton City Hall — Room 209
1000 Commonwealth Ave., Newton Centre, MA

REVISED PROPOSED STATEMENT OF COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT OBJECTIVES AND PROPOSED USE OF FUNDS

I. PURPOSE OF THE PUBLIC HEARING

Newton's Planning and Development Board, as the city-wide citizens advisory board to the Mayor for the federally funded Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) Program, is sponsoring a public hearing on 2 April 1986 on the City of Newton's Revised Proposed Statement of Community Development Objectives and Proposed Use of Funds for FY87 (Program Years 12). The purpose of the public hearing is to provide an opportunity for residents of Newton to comment on the projects proposed for funding under the CDBG Program in Fiscal Year 1987 (July 1986-June 1987) and to comment on the City's performance in carrying out the CDBG Program.

A public hearing was held on 7 January 1986 in regard to Newton's Proposed Statement of Community Development Objectives and Proposed Use of Funds for FY87. In this Statement, the City of newton proposed a FY87 Community Development Block Grant (CDBG) budget which assumed a 15 percent budget reduction. Since that time, it has become apparent that an additional 15 percent budget cut must be made to Newton's proposed FY87 budget . As a result, a Revised Proposed Statement of Community Development Objectives and Proposed Use of Funds for Program Year 12 (FY87) has been prepared, reflecting at total 30% budget reduction. (See below.)

Quinn: no comment on drug test

By Howard Altman
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Police Chief William Quinn will not comment on a reported plan for statewide, uniform drug testing of police officers being recommended by the Massachusetts Police Chiefs Association (MPCA). "I think it is too early to be talking about it," he says of the testing recommended by his association.

According to MPCA drug advisory committee president and Wilmington Police Chief Robert Stewart, the organization is in the process of deciding whether to introduce a bill in the Statehouse that would call for the testing or institute it through collective bargaining between individual forces and municipalities. Either way, Stewart says he expects MPCA action on the issue "around June."

Last week, a source on the Newton Police Association bargaining team disclosed that drug testing was a major obstacle in the 20-month-old labor dispute. The only force with drug testing as part of a collective bargaining agreement is Lowell. Lowell Chief Jack Sheehan says Newton is not the only force considering drug testing as part of a contract settlement.

"We are starting to get a lot of requests before the Mass Chiefs," he says. "Winchester is ready to implement it. Auburn, Chelmsford and Wilmington have requested information about our drug testing program. Mass Chiefs are endorsing drug testing 100 percent, it's just a matter of sitting down and coming up with the language."

Also last week, Boston Police Chief Francis Roache ordered his department to undergo drug testing, a policy Boston police union officials say they will challenge. Stewart says that either by state law, or collective bargaining, the remainder of the state's police forces should follow Lowell's lead. Regardless of how it is instituted, the emphasis of the testing, both Sheehan and Stewart say, will be probable cause.

Stewart points to a recent Florida court case involving the Palm Bay Police Force. He says two of their officers confessed to using marijuana, after which the entire force was subjected to urinalysis. Stewart, quoting from an article in the January issue of International Chiefs Magazine, said Florida's 5th District Court of Appeals held that any testing of an officer's blood or urine that is not part of the annual physical would have to be done with justifiable probable cause.

Sheehan says that in Lowell, probable cause is based on an officer's performance. If there is a radical departure from the norm, the officer can be ordered to take a urinalysis. If that tests positive for drug use, the officer is given the right to take a more accurate blood test to confirm or deny the results of the first test. He adds that first year officers are subject to random tests while post-probationary officers take it once a year.

"After the initial tests," Sheehan says, "I think any future tests should be based on probable cause. After a man's gone through the department, you get to know him. After 20 years on the job, I know just about all the officers and you can pick out the ones in trouble after all that time."

The NPA source said that the city is asking to deal with offenders on an individual basis, rather than a two-year probationary period the union is requesting. Both Sheehan and Stewart says that if an officer is caught using controlled substances in illegal situations, they should be dealt as any other criminal offender.

"If we have a case where an officer is abusing, say codeine for which he had a perscription, that is one thing," Stewart says. "But, if a guy is using cocaine, he is violating the law. I tend to go with the city of Newton on this. I think the public is going to demand that we arrest an officer using illegal drugs, because if they are going to arrest some 18-year-old pushing drugs at the local high school, someone is going to raise holy hell if we do not prosecute our own personnel for violating the same laws. Communities have a right to know if their officers are involved with illegal activities or their emergency response teams are under the influence of drugs."

Police threaten city trash picket next

Firefighters Association president Kevin McArdle. "I just hope they realize how inconvenienced we've been by this collective bargaining going on 21 months."

But several observers said the traffic was not nearly as congested as the previous Newton Corner picket March 5 when State Police closed off the turnpike exit ramp.

"It appears to be moving although there is congestion," said Assistant Fire Chief Joseph Daniele, referring to the traffic. "That might be attributed to the media. Radio stations notified many commuters this morning of the anticipated picket."

State Police joined with Newton officers held over from the day shift in an effort to keep the cars moving.

Lt. Thomas McLaughlin of the State Police said 15 troopers were on hand to assist with traffic flow. He communicated by walkie-talkie with Captain Robert Morse who circled the area in a helicopter.

"Yesterday, we were aware this was going to happen," he said, "and we made plans."

Newton Police Chief William F. Quinn cruised Newton Corner to keep tabs on the traffic situation. He declined to comment for the press.

The traffic stall angered some motorists. One estimated the line leading to Exit 17 was a mile long, another said it stretched back two miles.

"I think they can make their protest, but they don't have to tie up traffic," said one Newton resident.

"This is the biggest joke I ever saw," said one obviously annoyed woman.

But others took the 15 to 20 minute delay in stride and some expressed support for the picketers.

"I think they're justified," said Ted Seasholes of Newton Centre. "It's a very good way to get people's attention. It's too bad it had to come to this."

Several drivers were unware of the reason for the traffic tie up. "I thought they were shooting (the television show) Spenser," said Peter Bacci of Somerville.

"Two detectives walked by and said, 'I thought all the nuts had been locked up,'" Anderson said. "They voiced a few other obscenities I won't repeat."

Several police officers watched the lone picketer with amusement from the station windows.

"I think it's pretty comical, to tell you the truth," said one officer who declined to identify himself. "He's persistent, to say the least, but I think he needs a few more people out there to be effective."

Sgt. Charles McLean said he is aware the union picketing has made citizens angry and said he "applauds" the Charlestown man's right to picket.

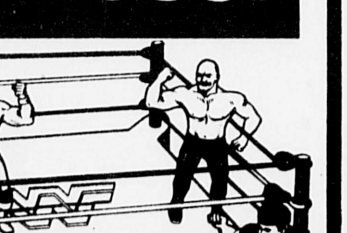

"We're not trying to win friends out there," he said. "We're trying to show people how frustrated we are."

Mann plots cities' strategy against new federal budget

By Kevin C. Kennedy
News Editor

BEACON HILL — Mayor Theodore D. Mann led his troops, fellow members of the Massachusetts Municipal Association (MMA), into open warfare against President Ronald Reagan's cuts in aid to the nation's cities and towns Saturday and came away from the fray with the promise of future negotiations.

Mann, as the president of the MMA, looked very much at home on the throne of the speaker of the House of Representatives as he and his colleagues commandeered the House chambers as a "war room" in which they plotted their strategy against the Gramm-Rudman budget regimen and other cutbacks in federal spending.

After a half day of strong rhetoric, the bottom line turned out to be that the lines of communication between the commonwealth's cities and towns and those who could give them relief, heads of the state's legislative and executive branches, would remain open.

Governor Michael Dukakis and Senate President William Bulger both promised Mann and his colleagues, representatives of the state's 351 municipalities, a "climate of discussion" and a "rare opportunity for dialogue" regarding the state's picking up the slack left by President Ronald Reagan's economic policies.

Both Dukakis and Bulger pointed out that Massachusetts is the only state in the nation even to address the injuries cities and towns have suffered at the hands of budget-cutters in Washington. Dukakis broke the news that, after three years in which he thought the state's aid to cities and towns was "most generous," he was setting up a "stabilization fund" with $179 million seed money as a buffer against further cuts in federal aid.

At the same time, the governor made it clear that anyone who thought the state could cover federal cuts "dollar for dollar" was "not realistic."

The definition of what was "realistic" and what was not came into question after Senator John F. Kerry followed several speakers who excoriated Gramm-Rudman budget-cutting measures and defined the bill in a way few would recognize. After explaining how cities and towns would suffer more without the strictures advocated by Gramm-Rudman, Kerry urged MMA officials who anticipate hardships under the new regime, "Don't get mad at the symptom of what's wrong, get mad at those who created the problem. Get mad at those who made the choices." The Gramm-Rudman cost-cutting measures, he explained, would force congress to "get responsible," he said.

Kerry pointed out that, while President Ronald Reagan had assumed a large deficit when he took office, he had managed to double it in five short years. Reagan's penchant for a strong defense, he said, was responsible for tradeoffs that resulted in large cutbacks in aid to the nation's cities and towns.

Kerry's speech followed closely on the heels of an address by Frank Shafroth, speaking for the National League of Cities, in which he warned municipal officials that the "dark cloud" they saw coming toward them from Washington was about to become a "radioactive" one if Reagan got a chance to execute his game plan. Given the systematic tradeoffs between defense spending, foreign aid and federal aid for cities and towns, Shafroth predicted the coming year would be the toughest yet for municipal officials.

"It seems to be the rule in Washington that we have revenue to share with the Philippines and Egypt ... but not with the nation's cities and towns," Shafroth said. Adding that the latest Reagan budget has twice as much money allotted to foreign aid as it does to municipal aid, he told the crowd, "This year, you're better off in Cairo, Egypt, than you are in Cairo, Illinois."

Fr. Moore revives tradition

WEST NEWTON — Fr. Anthony Moore of St. Bernard's Church will once again revive an ancient Catholic lenten tradition when he leads a "penitential walk" to seven of the city's Catholic churches on Good Friday afternoon.

Leaving from St. Bernard's at 1 p.m., the tour will lead between 50 and 100 participants to St. Jean's in Nonantum, Our Lady's, the Sacred Heart Chapel on Centre Street, Sacred Heart Church in Newton Centre, St. Phillip's in Waban and Corpus Christi in Auburndale.

Fr. Moore said the Friday afternoon pilgrimage is a survivor of an ancient lenten tradition that had worshippers making the rounds on the night of Holy Thursday "to pray at the altar of repose."

"Owing to the crime factor" prevalent in today's society, Fr. Moore explained, "people are now opposed to going out at night." So the event was moved to the afternoon of Good Friday.

Fr. Moore commented that not all the participants make it through the 11-mile course. A seasoned mountain climber himself, he added that the distance "doesn't worry me."

Village Study

Thompsonville expresses traffic woes

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

THOMPSONVILLE — The tiny village named for a hermit who lived in Hammond Woods is being engulfed daily by traffic from Newton Centre and massive Chestnut Hill shopping malls.

Thompsonville residents said traffic from the two larger villages backs up at the junction of Langley Road and Route 9 — also called Boylston Street — in the heart of their village center.

Shoppers from the Chestnut Hill Mall can use the Jackson Street "jug handle" to reach that intersection, make a U-turn on Route 9 and head back to Boston and Brookline, some residents said.

At the same time drivers from Newton Centre — one of the city's most heavily trafficked villages — travel Langley Road to reach Route 9 and exit Newton, they said.

About 30 Thompsonville residents met recently at the Bowen Elementary School, many of them asking Connery Associates of Winchester to find solutions to their traffic woes. Connery is performing the city's $191,000 Village Study.

The planning firm, which has listened to residents' comments and concerns at village centers throughout the city, hopes to provide a comprehensive development plan for the city's future by June 1987.

"I think you need to consider Thompsonville in conjunction with Newton Centre," said James Sullivan of Boylston Street, who is chairman of the Bowen/Thompsonville Neighborhood Association.

"We can't even come up our own street now," Langley Road resident Simon Laskey said. "How are we going to solve this problem?"

Louise Taglienti, wife of Alderman Dominic Taglienti, said vehicle congestion could be eased by putting a traffic light and a break in the Route 9 median strip at Chestnut Hill Mall.

Shoppers would then be able to head eastbound toward Boston without going up Route 9 to Thompsonville, she said.

The city never followed her suggestion, said Taglienti, a Newton Centre resident who was born in Thompsonville and has maintained a lifelong interest in the village. It was she who told the press the village was named after an 18th century hermit named Thompson.

Like their counterparts in other villages, Thompsonville residents said they fear potential business development in their own village center.

But they are worried just as much about future commercial development in other villages, which could increase Thompsonville's traffic problems.

A short distance down Route 9 in Chestnut Hill, for example, a 300,000 square foot commercial building at the old Valle's Steak House will have 1,100 parking spaces in a five-story underground garage.

Connery's figures show Thompsonville — one of the smallest of the city's 15 villages — faces less potential commercial development than the rest of Newton. Under present zoning, the entire city could increase its retail and office space by two and a half times the existing amount.

Thompsonville, in comparison, could add roughly 95 percent — about 66,000 square feet — to its present business space, Connery's figures show.

Connery consultant Robert Catineau said this potential commercial space is roughly half the size of 1 Newton Place, but he would not downplay its significance.

"That could have a substantial effect on a center the size of Thompsonville," he said.

Residents said development in other villages, future construction along Route 9 and any new commercial space around Langley Road could intensify the Thompsonville traffic problem.

The village center should not be considered as a separate island, but as a part of the entire development picture in Newton, some said.

"Thompsonville is a small residential neighborhood," said Sullivan. "We'd really be reluctant to see it turn into something like Route 9 in Natick."

Michael Moskow of Dudley Road said residents across Newton want commercial development in the Garden City halted.

"I have a feeling if there was a gut reaction in the city, they would vote for no more commercial development," he said.

When Connery makes its final recommendations for the city's future, "I don't think you'll see a lot of grand schemes for great development," Catineau said.

At the same time, Connery would have to show the possible side effects — such as a reduced tax base — if the city wished to aim for no business growth, Catineau said.

John Connery, the firm's president, said it may not be possible to restore to each center the village atmosphere of decades ago.

But the qualities of village life can be revived, he said. What is needed is different recommendations for each village, he said.

"You can't turn back the clock, but you can bring back pedestrian safety, convenience shopping and more public amenities," he said.

Oak Hill village center escapes development

By Maureen Azzato
Staff Writer

OAK HILL — Intensive development in the village center of Oak Hill is not likely because it is an isolated residential area with traffic access from only two roads off Dedham Street, Connery Associates consultant Robert Catineau says.

"This is a very neighborhood-oriented village, and it is extremely hard to get to, as far as market exposure," Catineau says. "It's not the kind of place someone would want to build a shopping center because it is so out of the way."

Representatives from Connery Associates solicited opinions from Oak Hill residents for the Newton Village Study. About 50 residents attended the meeting to hear what the consultants predict is in store for the future of the village, but only a few residents asked questions and voiced their opinions.

Although Catineau said future development would not threaten the village center, one resident said 25 years ago no one could conceive of the center being developed as it is today.

"Sure, it is possible, with present zoning, to perhaps make the convenience store center building all three stories tall. Anything is possible, but it just doesn't seem likely," Catineau said.

Resident Florence Baker said she would rather see the zoning laws changed to allow only two-story buildings.

"I, myself, would not care to see a large three-story building in our village center," Baker said. "It would be very unattractive and it would invite more business into the neighborhood, which would inevitably reduce the values of our homes."

Traffic on Dedham Street is an area with which some residents said they are concerned, but the study primarily concentrates on the neighborhood commercial centers.

"Dedham Street is really hazardous when we try getting in and out of our neighborhood, especially in the morning and rush hour," resident Philip Dorfman said.

According to Catineau, Dedham Street traffic is not within the scope of Oak Hill's village center study.

"I don't mean to put you off, because you have a very legitimate point, and it is something you should direct at your Board of Aldermen," Catineau said. "Unfortunately, this study doesn't include that potential problem."

Traffic in the village center is not heavy and poses no future problem, although the city, as a whole, has serious traffic problems, Catineau said.

Connery Associates plans to incorporate residents' comments into the alternative proposals, to be presented to each village concerning potential development of the village centers.

Firm says auto dominates village

NEWTON — Thompsonville is a little village center with small scale stores designed for pedestrian traffic. But its location along Route 9 means it is dominated by the automobile.

This was the assessment of Thompsonville provided last night by Connery Associates of Winchester, the planning firm performing the city's $191,000 Village Study.

Veteran's Park, a small "green space" that touches Route 9, serves only as a "modest buffer" for Jackson Street stores from the Route 9 traffic, Connery stated in its written summary of existing conditions in the village center.

The center itself has a mix of businesses, some designed to attract a neighborhood market, others to draw customers from across the city, the firm said.

But the predominant sights and sounds where Thompsonville touches Route 9 are those of the automobile, Connery said. Auto service businesses are highly visible on Route 9, Connery stated.

Under present zoning, the center could add little retail store space, 1,457 square feet or 3.5 percent of what already exists, the Winchester firm said.

But future development of office space and residences is potentially considerable, Connery stated.

Just short of 66,000 square feet of new office space could be built, about two and a half times what the center now has, Connery said.

And 73 residences could be added to the 124 already in the center, an increase of 58.9 percent, Connery said.

Newton's zoning would permit most of the business development to occur on Langley Road north of Jackson Street, the firm said.

Most of the new dwelling units could be built south of Route 9 on parcels not fully developed under the city's present zoning, Connery stated.

The planned construction of 300,000 square feet of retail and office space on the site of the old Valle's Steak House is likely to encourage that development south of Route 9, the firm said.

Village Study consultant says

Malls, college to affect Chestnut Hill

By Les Orsini
Staff Writer

NEWTON — Some Chestnut Hill residents worry the city's Village Study is ignoring them by focusing on the Route 9 retail district and Boston College, rather than where they live.

But Robert Catineau, consultant for Connery Associates of Winchester, said what happens at area shopping malls and the university would affect vitally the residential life in Chestnut Hill.

"We feel we're going to get a good handle on the problems in the area," Catineau said to about 25 residents at a recent Chestnut Hill Village Study meeting.

After Catineau presented figures for potential commercial development in Chestnut Hill along Route 9, several residents questioned whether the purpose of the study was to promote development or to preserve the neighborhood.

"It almost seems as if you've left us out," said one resident.

Catineau said the purpose of the study is not to promote development. "It was to examine growth to see if it can work and if not, to suggest some alternatives," Catineau said.

Hired to conduct the city's $191,000 Village Study, the consulting firm was presenting its assessment of existing village conditions and listening to comment.

The session, held at the Church of the Redeemer, was the last of 15 at village centers throughout the city.

Connery plans to visit each center again to discuss alternatives for Newton's future.

Catineau told Chestnut Hill residents they face more potential commercial, retail and office development — about 4 million square feet — than any village in Newton under present zoning.

That figure is one-third of the business development potential in all of Newton and more than three and a half times what is in Chestnut Hill now.

Chestnut Hill already has 30 percent of the total retail space in Newton, according to Connery's figures.

Much of development potential exists at parking lots of area malls, according to Connery. Commercial buildings could be constructed there and parking could be provided underground, according to Connery.

Already in Chestnut Hill, for example, a 300,000-square-foot office and retail building is being constructed on the site of the former Valle's Steak House on Route 9, Catineau said. About 1,100 parking spaces are to be provided in a five-story underground garage.

"When you look at that you can see some of these numbers are realistic," said Catineau.

Many of the residents at the meeting live on or near Hammond Street, which connects Route 9 to Boston College on Beacon Street.

Hammond Street already handles too much traffic in both directions, a situation that could only worsen with new commercial development, residents said.

Drivers use the roadway as access to Beacon Street and shoppers and mall employees use Hammond Street to travel to and from the commercial district.

"As it is now, the existing traffic on Beacon Street can't be handled," said one woman. "I don't see how much more we can expect in this area."

"More cars — what are you going to do? Fly them in?" said Edgar Crocker of Kingsbury Road.

Connery plans to compile estimates of how much traffic further development along Route 9 would generate and add that amount to figures in BC's 1985 traffic and parking study, Catineau said.

Performed by the firm of Tippetts-Abbett-McCarthy-Stratton, the study says traffic on Hammond and Beacon streets has increased significantly the last few years, but BC vehicles compose less than 2 percent of the total volume.

Many residents said the study should concentrate less on Route 9 and BC and more on the problems of residential areas in between the two.

"The study is really a study of Route 9," said Lisle Baker, a former alderman. "We don't view that as Chestnut Hill. We view that as a regional shopping center."

Doris J. Keating of Brookline, who is president of the Chestnut Hill Garden Club, urged residents and Connery to protect the area's wetlands, gardens, and trees. The neighborhood's many historic homes also should be preserved, she said.

In comparison, Brookline has few green spots, she said. "We are trying very hard in Brookline to find an acre, anything," she said after the meeting. "It seems to me you have a unique jewel in Chestnut Hill."

Teacher nominated for fellowship

NEWTON — The National Endowment for the Humanities Foreign Language Collaborative, sponsored by Pine Manor College, a four-year liberal arts college for women, served as the review panel for the first Rockefeller Foundation fellowships for exceptional foreign language teaching in high school.

The Boston-based local review panel was composed of both high school and college language faculty, college presidents and academic administrators.

More than 800 teachers nation wide applied for the fellowships, a three-year, $1.5 million program to recognize and encourage exceptional foreign language teaching in high schools.

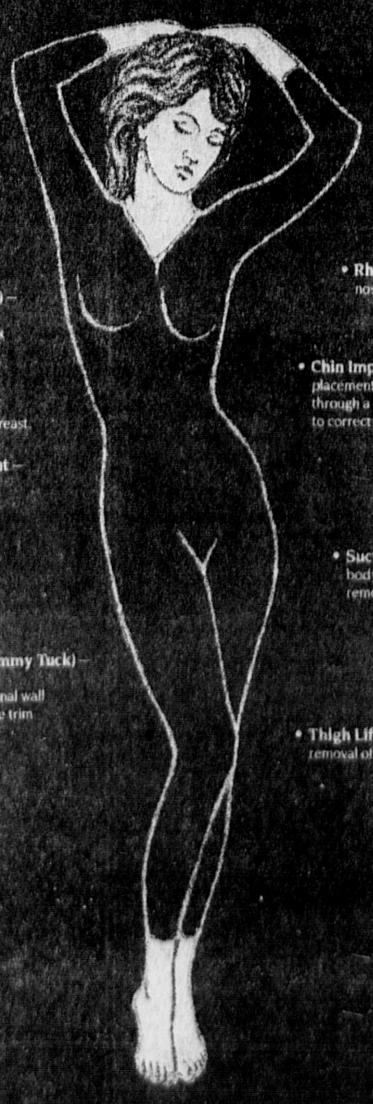

At the recent Pine Manor College meeting, nine faculty members received nominations and honorable mention. Of the more than 800 teachers applying for fellowships, 100 will be named Rockefeller Fellows. Each will receive $4,500 for summer study or travel to enhance their knowledge of the country and culture whose language they teach.

In Newton, Olga Robinson, a French teacher at Newton South High School was nominated for a fellowship.

The Pine Manor College sponsored NEH Collaborative is a three-year-old organization, one of 80 nationwide, supporting the teaching and study of foreign languages at both secondary and college levels.

New advances put some teeth into dentistry

By Jeff Peterson, In Focus Editor

Few sounds, save perhaps the whistle of incoming mortar shells just before impact, evoke the kind of stomach-churning, palm-sweating fear brought on by the high-speed whine of a dentist's drill.

It's no secret that fearing the dentist is probably the closest most people come to exhibiting a true phobia. Even those who resignedly accept the twice-yearly visits usually eye the family dentist with a lugubrious distrust.

It needn't be this way, says Dr. Parviz Darviche, 54, long-time Waltham dentist and instructor at the prestigious Tufts Dental School. Darviche says a reassuring "chair-side manner" is the key to easing a patient's apprehension — even more than anesthetics.

"You have to tell them truthfully if it's going to hurt," he says.

Dr. Jerome Haber, 38, a periodontist practicing in Weston, agrees. Fear is due primarily to a lack of information, he says, promoted in large part by dentists who lay guilt trips on their patients.

"I'd say 90 percent of all patients feel guilty when they come to the dentist, and they shouldn't," Haber says. "Gum disease is an infection. You wouldn't feel guilty about getting a head cold."

Darviche frowns on the use of nitrous oxide or "laughing gas," preferring to keep anesthesia as local as possible. Xylocaine (as opposed to Novacaine) is his painkiller of choice, administered in the time-honored method of hypodermic needle-to-gum.

In this, Darviche remains a purist. He eschews the use of technical innovations such as Dr. Herbert Yolin's "Comfort Machine," which uses electrical pulsations to deaden nerves.

But this same technology has spawned a whole new era in preventative dentistry — an era in which tooth decay may join polio as just another unpleasant memory.

Dr. Stanley Cohen, president of the Mass. Dental Society, says new treatments may make ours the last cavity-prone generation — hardly the most impressive legacy by which to be remembered.

Some of these treatments, such as flouridated water, anti-cavity rinses and the application of sealants, are preventative measures. Others, like bonding, have been touted as cure-alls for virtually any type of dental restoration.

According to Darviche, bonding involves etching the surface of the tooth enamel and applying a plastic filling material which penetrates the etched area. This material can be matched to the color of the existing teeth.

Bonding is not perfect, cautions Darviche, a specialist in prosthodontics — the replacement of missing or disfigured teeth. It doesn't cure everything. Bonding material can break, and over time discolor. Moreover, it is not cheap.

"If somebody comes up with something good they're not going to give it to you for nothing," he says pragmatically.

But for an individual saddled with less-than-perfect teeth it can bring miraculous results.

Despite the rapid advances in dental technology, Darviche says it is unlikely traditional restorative dentists will become obsolete. He points to statistics which show the Northeast sporting a higher rate of tooth decay than the rest of the county.

Part of this is hereditary, he says, part is due to better floridation practices in western states.

"Even though we have some of the the best facilities in the world the demand for dental care is much greater here than in the West," Darviche says. "Maybe we have a sweet tooth in this part of the country."

For his or her trouble, the average dentist can expect to make in excess of $61,200 this year. The picture isn't as rosy for recent graduates, however. A 1984 survey conducted by the American Dental Association showed dentists under 30 making an average of $34,000.

With the exception of the material used in fillings, the road to private practice is hardly paved with silver and gold. The ADA estimates it costs from $60,000 to $120,000 — exclusive of leasing space — to set up and furnish a two-room office with a "moderately-sized" lab. This makes opening a private practice virtually out of the question for many recent dental school grads.

Based on a 1983 survey, the ADA found dentists paid an average annual rent of $9,300, spent $12,000 each year on dental supplies, $18,000 on commercial dental lab charges and $38,000 on salaries for receptionists, assistants and hygenists.

Total annual expenditure: $122,000.

Maintaining and replacing state-of-the-art equipment is no bargain either. According to Darviche, dentists are "suckers" for buying new equipment — such as a recently-purchased fiber optics unit which provides direct lighting for a tooth being drilled.

"It's very expensive," he said, "and yet it is a very nice innovation."

Even such seemingly insignificant items as rubber gloves and surgical masks can add up. Darviche spends more than $3,000 annually on gloves alone at his five-person office on Moody Street.

"There's no question there are some overhead costs grads have to face," says ADA spokesman Richard Asa.

Young dentists also carry with them a lot of fiscal baggage. Tuition at Tufts is currently $15,000 — books, room and board pushes annual costs over $22,000. In the Northeast, where aspiring dentists flock to the "big three" of Harvard, BU and Tufts, the average student is $40,000 in debt by the time he or she graduates. The national figure is lower — approximately $28,000 — but still substantial.

"That in itself keeps many people from applying to dental school," Darviche says. "Not many can afford that kind of money."

One outgrowth of this financial picture is the appearance of "mall dentistry" — a catch-all term which includes both retail store and franchise dentistry.

Retail dentistry typically refers to dental services offered within a retail department drug store (Sears is probably the most visible). The space usually is leased to a separate administrative group which will then sublease to a dentist.

Franchise dentistry refers as much to a method of marketing dental services under a trade name. In return for a financial investment, the participating dentist or dentists are allowed to use a well-marketed trade name.

Under such arrangements, furnishings and office arrangements are typically the responsibility of the participating dentists.

The ADA acknowledges the existance of retail and franchise dentistry, but stops short of calling them a trend.

"Our most current statistsics are that 95 to 98 percent of all dental services are still provided by traditional private practices," Asa says, adding that 75 percent of private practitioners operate solo. "That remains the backbone of private practice."

Similarly, the ADA thus far has refrained from adopting an official position on either retail or franchise dentistry.

"We do feel it's still in its trial stages of providing dental care," Asa says. "Because the concept is still new there are many questions about the stability of dentist-patient relationships. But we feel it will be tested in the marketplace."

Despite the high costs associated with dentistry, the appears no lack of demand for trained professionals. Part of this is undoubtedly prestige. Part of it is salary.

According to Darviche, full-time dental assistants in the greater Boston area earn from $15,000 to $20,000. A high school diploma is all that is required. Dental hygenists, which require two years of training, typically earn $26,000 annually.

Even so, Darviche has found it extremely difficult to recruit dental assistants and hygenists, a condition he attributes to the high employment rate in Massachusetts.

"I spent over $1,000 advertising for a hygenist and I didn't get anyone," he says.

Technology tempers dentist-office dread

By David Weber
Staff Writer

NEWTON — I remember being a youngster and going to the dentist to get my cavities drilled and filled. My dentist always gave me Novacaine, so the drilling never caused me much pain.

However, I hated needles. Dr. Chupinksy, my family dentist back in Washington, Pa., always tried to hide that Novacaine needle by holding it behind his hip, like a quarterback doing his best hip fake. He would then use one hand to shield my eyes as the hand holding the needle moved toward my mouth.

But Dr. Chupinsky wore eyeglasses and at the last second, I could always see in the reflection from his glasses the shiny, silver needle enter my mouth. Then it came — The Jab.

Had I been born about 20 years later, I might have never experienced The Jab. A new drugless, needleless method of anesthesia is now being offered a Newton dentist.

The electrical anesthesia device is called "The Comfort Machine" and it uses tingling electrical pulsations to stimulate nerves and numb the area of the gum around the tooth in question.

Dr. Herbert Yolin has been using the machine in his Newton Centre practice since fall. He calls it a "major milestone in dentistry" and said, "it's fantastic for getting people who are terrified of needles to the dentist."

Manufactured by Pain Prevention Inc. in Deerfield, Ill., the machine runs on a rechargeable battery and is about the size of a car battery. A conductive jelly is applied to the gum near the tooth to be worked on. Two electrodes wrapped by small, cylindrical sponges are then placed on the gum and held there with a plastic clamp.

The patient holds a control box in his hands and can adjust the intensity of the electrical pulsations.

One of Dr. Yolin's assistants hooked me up to "The Comfort Machine" so I could experience it firsthand. The tingling sensation it produced in my mouth was similar to feeling your foot fall asleep, except the feeling can be increased or eliminated completely with a spin of the control box dial. Unlike Novacaine, the numbness ends immediately after the the machine is turned down.

Although I had no drilling done, Dr. Yolin used a probe to scrape some tartar off one of my teeth. First he poked around my gums without the machine turned up, causing a bit pain. Then he told me to turn the machine up, and once again he poked around my gums. I could hardly feel the probe in my mouth.

Dr. Yolin said he lets patients know when he is going to be drilling their teeth, or doing something else that might cause some pain, so they can "dial up" and block the pain with a more intense electrical buzz.

He said he has always been interested in using novel methods of relieving pain, and perviously has used hypnosis on some patients. The machine had been advertised in dental journals, and Yolin travelled to a seminar in Chicago to see a demonstration of the machine. He was impressed.

After checking with other dentists using the machine, he purchased one for $3,500. Yolin said approximately 700 have been sold around the country.

He said he also has used the machine to treat patients with head and neck pain associated with temporal mandibular jaw bone trouble. This occurs when a person's bite is not quite right, causing tension on the joint connecting the jawbone to the rest of the skull. Some persons with this condition suffer severe migraines.

Yolin said he uses "The Comfort Machine" to help patients relax their jaw completely, thereby allowing him to form a more natural bite for the patient.

Franklin students raise $4,000 for Easter Seals

Over $4,000 was raised by 75 students at the Franklin School in West Newton during the Easter Seal Boston Celtics Basketball Shoot-out held at the school. Mike McEnaney was the high money raiser at the school, contributing $360 towards Easter Seal services for people with disabilities.

Basketball Shoot-outs are sponsored each year by the Zayre Corporation for schools throughout Massachusetts. The Boston Celtics are the co-sponsors of these events and Celtics guard Kevin McHale, is the honorary chairman of the 1985-86 school year.

All students participating in the shoot-outs are eligible to win prizes ranging from a Boston Celtics Easter Seal t-shirt to an Easter Seal Sports Wallet. The grand prize for any boy or girl who raises $1,000 or more is a Boston Celtics team autographed basketball and two tickets to a Celtics game.

Proceeds from the event are used to fund Easter Seal services for people with disabilities. Using leverage to make money

MONEY TALK$

Neville Frankel is Vice President of Financial Planning Associates Inc., a Boston and New York affiliate of Confidential Planning Network, an international network of more than 120 financial planning firms. Direct questions to Frankel, care of this publication.

Dear Mr. Frankel:

In evaluating investments especially real estate partnerships, I often read about the use of "leveraged" or "unleveraged" purchases. Could you explain the difference?

D.F. Newton

Dear D.F.:

To understand leverage, think back to high school physics. Remember Archimedes' famous statement "Give me a place to stand, and I will move the world"? Archimedes' point was that a well-placed lever makes one capable of great feats of strength.

Leverage, in the economic sense, means the borrowing of money for investment, and it works the same way. In physics you have the mechanical advantage of the well-placed lever enabling you to do more than you otherwise can; in business you have the economic advantage of well-placed leverage enabling you to profit more than you otherwise might.

When you invest with borrowed money in addition to your own resources, well placed investment dollars will reap financial rewards which are disproportionately greater than you would have received investing with just your own money. Borrowing is the lever that allows your own dollars to do more work. In other words, leverage allows you to create a larger investment.

Of course, this stresses the advantages of a "well-placed" lever. If instead, your leveraged investment fails, the same dollar dynamics that caused you to win more in a relatively good investment will work in reverse, and you will lose that much more.

Leverage is used for investing in all kinds of business activities. If you have a mortgage on your home, you have made your investment in your home with leveraged money. Leverage is the key to the tax advantages in many tax shelters — equipment leasing, cattle feeding, movies, and especially real estate — and is therefore a crucial concept.

Borrowing is fundamental to tax shelter investing. It is the leverage that increases the size of your investment which, in turn, snowballs into amplified profits, depreciation and interest deductions, and all of the other benefits that, when a deal goes well, make tax sheltering attractive.

It is also important to understand the liability which leverage implies when a deal goes sour. Even if you are one of the rare investors who bothers to read the tax shelter offering memorandum and gets to the passage where the extent of liability is disclosed, you must understand that liability. When you leverage, you multiply not only the potential profit, but the potential loss as well.

As has been said repeatedly, only consider tax shelters that appear to make economic sense. This rule applies doubly when you are involved in an investment that is leveraged, be it real estate or a bet on a horse. Only if the investment looks like a winner will leverage make sense.

Uninsulated ducts waste energy

By The Associated Press

TOLEDO, OHIO — Most energy-conscious consumers check the "R-value" or insulating power of wall and roof insulation, as well as double- and triple-glazed storm windows, before they buy a new home.

But most overlook insulated ductwork, another important energy-saving feature, says Stephen C. Macy of Owens-Corning Fiberglas Corp., insulation manufacturers.

"The ducts of a central air handling system bring cooled or heated air from air conditioner or furnace to registers of vents in the living quarters," says Macy. "Thus, uninsulated ducts can waste energy by allowing air to escape from leaky joints or heat to escape through duct walls, even in insulated basements and attics."

Fiberglass ducts or fiberglass-wrapped sheet metal ducts can improve the efficiency and economy of operation of a home's air handling system by minimizing the air and heat loss, says Macy.

Michael Krach, vice president, Owens-Corning Fiberglas, offers these tips on buying and installing insulation:

— First, measure the area to be insulated and multiply the length and width to get the square footage required. Next, determine how wide the insulation should be.

Insulation usually is installed between attic joists or wall studs and the space between them almost always is 22½ inches or 14½ inches, depending on local building codes and the age of the house. Therefore, typical insulation material required is designated either 24 to 23 inches, or 16 to 15 inches in width.

— Determine if you need a vapor barrier and what is the proper insulation thickness or R-value.

If the area already has some insulation, use unfaced insulation — without a vapor barrier. If there is no insulation, install a material faced with aluminum foil paper. The facing should be installed towards the warm-in-winter side of the construction.

The dealer should be able to tell you the R-value for your area.

— When you're ready to install the insulation, remember to wear safety glasses and work gloves and have a sharp knife available.

Properly caulking and weatherstripping areas around doors, windows and small openings and cracks in the structure of the house is important to cut down on drafts and reduce the infiltration of moisture, noise, dust and dirt, Krach adds.

How you can clean carpet spills fast

Emergency calls to carpet-care hot lines pick up during the holidays when seasonal revelry often leads to inadvertent spills that can ruin a good carpet. While you might not be able to prevent such accidents, your carpet may survive them better if you follow these tips on carpet care from Consumer Reports' textile experts:

First, and perhaps most important, when you spot a spill, clean it up fast. With some spilled substances (such as children's fruit drinks), you have only minutes before the stain sets permanently.

Prepare for spills before they happen. A carpet first-aid kit should include a dry-cleaning solvent from your supermarket or hardware store for greasy, oily spills. For water-soluble stains, make up a detergent solution (one teaspoon dishwashing liquid per cup of water).

Some spills can contain both oily and water-soluble substances. For them, use the dry-cleaning solvent first and then the detergent solution. Follow the same procedure for unidentified spills.

To clean up the spill, first blot or scrape up as much as possible. Then cover the soiled carpet with a pad of several paper towels and stand on the towels for a minute or so. Then apply the cleaning solution.

Pour some of the dry-cleaning solvent onto a rag or paper towel first, and then use the solvent-soaked cleaning cloth to clean the carpet. The detergent solution can be applied directly on the carpet. Don't over-wet the carpet. Remember to blot, not rub, the spill.

Repeat those steps until the spill is cleaned up.

How you can build a stereo on a limited budget

It's easy to spend a lot for a stereo system. But if your budget is limited, Consumer Reports' electronics engineers say that you can still assemble a basic stereo component system that will deliver good quality sound for less than $500.

If this will be a starter system, all you really need is a receiver, speakers, either a compact disc player or a turntable and phono cartridge, and possibly a cassette deck. Any one component is compatible with any of the other recommended components for the engineers' recommended low-priced stereo system.

The receiver is the control center for the stereo system. It contains the AM/FM radio as well as knobs and switches to adjust volume, tone and stereo balance. Four highly rated receivers to consider for the system, listed in alphabetical order, are the Pioneer SXV200, Realistic STA115, Sony STRAV260 and Ultrx R35. They're priced at $210 or less; sizable discounts are common.

Loudspeakers are also essential for a stereo system. More than any other component, the speakers are responsible for the quality of sound that your system delivers.

Five highly rated speakers recommended by the electronics engineers, listed alphabetically, are the Boston Acoustics A40 and A60, the EPI T/E70, JBL J216A and Pioneer CSG201WA. (The Boston Acoustics A60 and the Pioneer speakers did a better job of reproducing loud, deep bass than the others.) The recommended speakers list for $200 or less, before discounts.

CD players deliver superb audio quality. The quality of their discs is also very good and they're becoming more readily available and in greater variety.

The engineers' choices for compact disc players include the Emerson CD150, discounted at less than $200, and the Sony D5, at around $220, discounted. Besides using the Sony player as part of a hi-fi system, it can also be used independently with earphones, or portably with its $50 battery pack and carrying case.

If want to play LPs, you'll still need a traditional turntable and phono cartridge, since you can't play ordinary records on a CD player. Turntables recommended for the system include the Pioneer PL660BLK, Sony PSLX240, Sony PSLX340 and the Technics SLBD35. All four have a tone arm that takes a convenient, plug-in phono cartridge. The Technics, at $150, list, was the most expensive of the four, but you should pay considerably less after discounts.

Phono cartridges recommended for the system include the Audio-Technica AT112EP, Ortofon TM7 and Shure M99E. The Audio-Technica emphasizes the extreme treble more than the others, making recordings sound a bit brighter. The phono cartridges retail for $75 or less, and may be discounted substantially.

A cassette deck is also a handy component for a stereo system. It can be used to play back commercially recorded music, to record programs from the radio, or to copy an LP for safekeeping. Six decks were recommended for the low-priced system.

Three use the Dolby B noise reduction method. (You get less background noise with Dolby B.) They are, in alphabetical order, the Akai HXA101M, Sony TCFX 220 and Teac V316. The rest use both Dolby B and Dolby C. (Dolby C is preferable for taping live music or compact discs.) They are the Akai HXA201, Sony TCFX320 and Teac V416. Most are priced at or below $200. But discounts of 50 percent or more from the list price for the decks are not uncommon. (C)1986, Newspaper Enterprise Assn.

Clinic on home repairs

Q. Can you tell me how to install a doorbell system activated by one doorbell button that causes two chimes to operate at the same time? The chimes are located in separate parts of the house. I understand how to install multiple door buttons for one door chime, but that's not my problem.

A. If you can install a door-bell system with a single chime operated by a single button, then adding another chime is relatively simple. The chimes are connected in parallel with two wires from the door button to the first chime's two terminals and then two wires from those terminals to the terminals on the second set of chimes. If one chime is already in place, all you have to do is run 18-gauge bell wire from its terminals to the terminals of the new chime.

Most chimes have three terminals which enable them to be activated by two separate buttons — one at the front door and one at the rear door. The center terminal is usually for the transformer connection, and the right and left terminals are for the front and rear push button connections.

When wiring the chimes, make sure that you connect the wires to the same terminals on each set. It's also important that you use a transformer of adequate size. A 10-volt transformer works with a single set of chimes, but for a two-chime system, you'll need a 16-volt transformer to do the job. In most systems, the transformer is in the basement with a direct connection to a 115-volt junction box and bell wire making the longer runs to the bell pushes and the chimes.

Q. What causes a section of concrete driveway to fail after only eight years? The apron — between the street and sidewalk — remains strong without any pitting at all. However, the section between the sidewalk and house is crumbling to stone, sand and powder. Both sections were poured the same day, but from different truckloads. Both are exposed to the same salt from city streets, but I applied no salt to either section myself.

A. It is possible that the concrete mix in the trucks was different even though the mix came from the same supplier. Concrete with too much water and/or not enough cement is likely to be too weak to withstand an automobile load. You didn't mention whether or not the deteriorating driveway section collects water run-off from a side yard or downspouts. Water that puddles, and then freezes and thaws, can shorten the lifespan of concrete.

If you park your car on this section, it's also possible that the deicing salts from the city streets that accumulate on the undercarriage drip off onto the driveway, causing surface deterioration.

Since the deteriorated section is beyond rehabilitation, it will have to be replaced. This time, make sure the concrete mix contains an air-entraining admixture, which is required if the concrete is exposed to freezing and thawing.

Poetry, luncheon mark Library Week

NEWTON — April 6 to 12 is National Library Week, and the Newton Free Library is celebrating with a variety of events.

A book/author luncheon featuring Pulitzer Prize-winning poet and former Newton resident Maxine Kumin and author Richard Lourie, book reviews by Library Director Virginia A. Tashjian, the 13th annual evening of poetry, 18 children's programs, free films and art exhibits are among the highlights.

Maxine Kumin is a poet, novelist, essayist and writer of short stories whose latest work is a volume of poetry, "The Long Approach." In October she was awarded the Fellowship of the Academy of American Poets.

Richard Lourie's new book, "First Loyalty," is a suspense novel, reviewed as "espionage fiction at its best." An accomplished translator active in the Russian literary underground, Lourie has been called "a communications link between Russian citizens and this country." He is a local resident.

Kumin and Lourie are slated to speak at the Friends of the Newton Free Library's second annual book/author luncheon at noon Friday, April 4, at the Marriott Hotel, 2345 Commonwealth Ave.

Paintings by artist Carolyn Refsnes Kniazzeh also are to be featured in the NFL's Gallery, with a reception for the artist slated from 7:30 to 9 p.m. Monday, April 7.

Poets Jacquelyn Crews, Alan Feldman, Ryah Tumarkin Goodman, John Hildebidle and Ruth Lepson are expected to read from their works during the library's 13th annual evening of poetry at 7:15 p.m. Tuesday, April 8. This event is sponsored by the Friends. All are welcome.

Library Director and author Virginia A. Tashjian is scheduled to review books at 10 a.m. Wednesday, April 9, at the Upper Falls Branch of the NFL, 45 Pettee St.

Moms' and Tots' story hours, preschool- and school-age story hours and films are among the 18 children's programs scheduled in the main junior library and in library buildings throughout the city. Telephone 552-7157 for schedules.

Free films about the 1940's and -50's are slated for screening at the main library at 7 p.m. Wednesday, April 9.

National Library Week special events are expected to conclude with "The Price is Right" book sale at the Auburndale Branch Library from 9 a.m. to 3 p.m. Saturday, April 12, sponsored by the Friends. For more information, telephone 552-7145.

Boston area poets to read for poetry evening

NEWTON — "If I had my wish I'd find a way to be a poet of marriage and fatherhood – especially the former, because there seem to be so few," declares John Hildebidle, one of five Boston area poets who will read at the Newton Free Library, 414 Centre St., Newton Corner, on Tuesday, April 8, 7:15 p.m. during the Library's celebration of National Library Week. Poets Jacquelyn Crews, Alan Feldman, Ryah Tumarkin Goodman, and Ruth Lepson will also read from their works during the Library's Thirteenth Annual Evening of Poetry.

An award-winning poet on the literature faculty at Massachusetts Institute of Technology, Hildebidle, the author of The Old Chore (Alice James Books) just completed a second collection of poetry and is working on a collection of short fiction, Stubborness: A Field Guide, due out in the fall. Hildebidle received his BA and Ph.D. from Harvard University and lives in Cambridge. His poetry and fiction have appeared in numerous periodicals and quarterlies including The Pennsylvania Review, Kenyon Review, Prairie Schooner, Partisan Review, and New England Review.

"My poems have always been mainly about domestic matters," says Alan Feldman, one of four Massachusetts poets who has just been awarded a National Endowment for the Arts grant. In his new book of poems, Any Sort of Love That Stays, loosely rhymed sonnets are interspersed with free verse poems.

Feldman grew up in New York, attended Columbia, received his Ph.D. from SUNY, Buffalo and is now a professor of English at Framingham State College. His poetry has been published extensively in magazines including The Atlantic, The New Yorker, The Kenyon Review, Tendril, Ploughshares, and New American Review.

Jacquelyn Crews currently is working on a non-fiction account of a Tennessee Brigadoon. She is the Associate Editor of Tendril and has completed a poetry manuscript The Spring at Diana, Tennessee. In 1986, Crews was awarded the Amelia Prize in Poetry and was a finalist in 1985 for the Walt Whitman Prize. Crews received her MFA in 1982 from Warren Wilson College and has had work published in Ploughshares, The Christian Science Monitor, Tendril and other journals. She lives in Boston.

Ryah Tumarkin Goodman has published three collections of poems: Towards the Sun, Suddenly It's Evening, and New and Selected Poems (William L. Bunham, publisher, 1985). Mrs. Goodman, a Brookline resident, was born in Russia and came to the U.S. when she was 6 years old. Her work has appeared in many periodicals and anthologies including The Saturday Review, The Nation, and The New Republic. She has also written music to some of her lyrics for broadcast on stations WGBH and WBUR.

Ruth Lepson, who teaches at Boston College and Bentley College, just completed her third manuscript, Three, which contains dialogues, prose poems, drawings, and "playful and serious poems." In Dreaming in Color, (Alice James Brooks, 1980), Lepson "concentrated on language as a surface." Her second manuscript, Sarth Tones, is a more narrative book, with poems about love and places and people she knows. Her work has appeared in The Harbor Review, The Country Poet, Gryphon, The Boston Phoenix, and several anthologies.

This special event, sponsored by the Friends of the Newton Free Library, Nancy Criscitiello, president, is one of more than twenty events the NFL has scheduled to celebrate National Library Week. The program is free and all are welcome. For more information call 552-7145.

Swedenborg to inaugurate 11th president

NEWTON — The Swedenborg School of Religion inaugurated Dr. Mary Kay Klein as its 11th president on March 15 in ceremonies at the school, 48 Sargent St., Newton. SSR is a graduate-level seminary dedicated to the education of ministers for the general convention of Swedenborgian Churches.

In her inaugural address Dr. Klein describes the primary purpose of SSR as the education of men and women for the Christian ministry. The goal of the Swedenborgian Church is to help persons to become aware of the presence of the Divine as they learn to experience their integrity and meaning as unique individuals.

Future ministers, the facilitators of this process, need an atmosphere where they can grow in wisdom and love, as well as in specific professional ministerial skills, during their time of preparation at the Seminary.

Prior to her address, Dr. Klien will be presented a presidential medallion by Harvey M. Johnson, President of the New Church Theological School Corporation. Elizabeth S. Young, chair of the school's Board of Managers, will welcome the delegates and representatives of other colleges, universities and seminaries.

The Rev. Randall E. Laakko, president of the General Convention of Swedenborgian Churches; the Rev. Richard H. Tafel, chairman of General Convention's Council of Ministers; and Dr. Paul G. Bunnell, president of Urbana University in Ohio, will deliver speeches of greeting.

Dr. Klein received her bachelor's degree in mathematics from the College of New Rochelle, and her master's degree and doctorate in philosophy from Boston University.

Prior to accepting the presidency, Dr. Klein had served as a faculty member at Urbana University, Ohio Dominican College, the University of Dayton, and the Pontifical College Josephinum. She has also held administrative positions at Urbana and Ohio Dominican.

Name Thirumalaisamy Academic hoop star

NEWTON — Pillan Thirumalaisamy recently became the first basketball player in Newton South history to be named to the Academic All-State team.

The senior guard was honored by the Massachusetts Basketball Coaches' Association.

To be considered for the honor, which annually goes to no more than 12-15 players in the entire state, a student has to be ranked in the top fourth of his or her class, score a combined 1100 or better on the college boards, and display "basketball excellence," during the course of the season.

Thirumalaisamy was on the money in every category. The senior averaged 14 points a game, dished out 74 assists and posted 38 steals playing the off-guard slot.

He has already been accepted by the Massachusetts Institute of Technology, and is also considering Harvard and Yale among his college choices.

Thirumalaisamy received his award Sunday afternoon prior to the annual Top 48 game at Minuteman Tech in Lexington. That program features the top hoop talent in the state, with 48 boys and 24 girls selected to play in All-Star contests. The games are always heavily attended by college scouts. Thirumalaisamy was invited to attend, but playing in the game would have interfered with his baseball duties at Newton South, so he declined.

Tigers' Lockwood an All-Star

By Roy LeBlanc
Staff Writer

Sometimes the vote for a league's Most Valuable Player is just a formality. The choice was clear in the American League in 1967, as no one came close to Carl Yastrzemski's performance. A year later, when Denny McClain won 31 games for the Tigers, the pick wasn't too tough either.

This year's selection for the top basketball player in the Suburban League probably wasn't even as close as those votes. Cambridge Rindge and Latin's Rumeal Robinson ran away with the vote of the circuit's coaches without even a hint of a challenge. As if he hadn't done enough to deserve it during the season, Robinson went on to lead his club to the state championship in the tournament.

The 6-2 guard did it all for the Warriors. He handled the ball, scored, rebounded, and played most of the game above the rim. His most recent honor was being named to Parade Magazine's All-American squad, which annual takes only the best high school players in the country.

Robinson will be taking his talents to Michigan next winter, where he'll be a threat to push somebody out of a job rather quickly.

Newton North placed one player on the league's first team, Andy Lockwood. Waltham was blanked on the first squad, but had a second-team Little member in Matt Little, while Nelson Aviles was named to the third team.

Little, a 6-2 senior forward, led the Hawks in scoring at 13.8 points per game. He was averaging more most of the season, but was subpar over the last couple of weeks of the season, due to illness and injury. Coach Joe Cacciatore called that "the main reason we missed the tournament. It tells you just how important he was to our team."

Little averaged eight rebounds a game and was an outstanding foul shooter, hitting 76 percent of his attempts from the line.

He's considering Bentley College or Framingham State to continue his education next fall.

Aviles, Waltham's 6-3 center, wasn't far behind Little in scoring at 12.7 per contest. Though a senior, he's still learning the game, and Cacciatore feels "his best playing days are still ahead of him."

A wide receiver on the Waltham football team last fall, Aviles is looking at Framingham State, Suffolk or North Adams State.

Not surprisingly, Cambridge, Brockton and Brookline dominated the All-Star selections. Including the first three teams, four members of each squad were All-Stars.

In addition to Robinson, Cambridge teammate Lance Dottin was named to the first team. Jim Edgehill made the second squad, with Russell Jarvis being named to the third.

Brockton also had a pair of first-team selections in Curtis Jackson and Orlander Vandross. John Dozier was a second-team pick, and Rubin McGee earned his way on the third team.

Darryl Snowden was Brookline's lone pick on the first team. Enrue Halfkenney and Chris Hummel got on the second team. Josh Lipsky got a third-team bid.

The lone area first-teamer:

Andy Lockwood — This senior forward was "a sure two points most of the year," according to Coach Jerry Phillips. "Any time that Andy touched the ball I was extremely pleased, because I knew he would get fouled or score. Either way, he would definitely take the ball to the hole. ... I knew 80 percent of the time he would score."

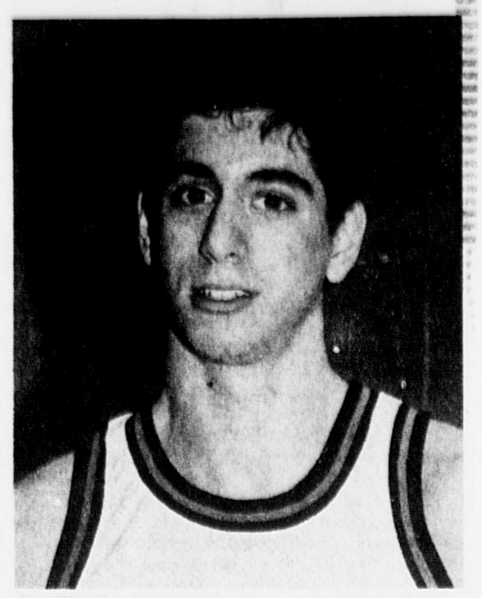

This strategy not only put points on the board for Newton, but got opposing big men into foul trouble as well.

Only 6-2, Lockwood had to play bigger forwards or centers in almost every game, but still averaged better than 17 points and hauled down between 8-10 rebounds every time out.

"He had his work cut out for him the whole season," said the coach. "He had to score and play somebody bigger than him. ... He had to fill the middle for us on defense, then score at the other end."

What helped Lockwood achieve all of that for the Tigers was his intensity, said Phillips: "He worked as hard as he possibly could have."

Yet the senior seemed to have the ability to keep things in their place even in the heat of the battle.

North's Andy Lockwood Jeff Sperber photo

"Andy's a very easy-going person," the coach explained. "He had a lot of intensity when he was playing, but seems to have everything in perspective. He realizes it's only a game while still giving 120 percent."

Lockwood, an excellent student, sticks to basketball when it comes to organized sports. Already committed to Wesleyan for next fall, he hopes to continue his career on the hardwood there.

The All-Stars:

MVP-Rumeal Robinson, Cambridge Rindge and Latin.

First team

Andy Lockwood, Newton North; Lance Dottin, Cambridge; Darryl Snowden, Brookline; Curtis Jackson, Brockton; Orlander Vandross, Brockton.

Boys' Club Tournament

Newton five edges Waltham in A Div.

WALTHAM — The great Miami Dolphins had the one-two punch of Griese-Czsonka. The vintage Red Sox had the double-play combo of Burleson-Doyle. Friday night, the Newton Community Center had the scoring duo of Terry Chenault and Bubba Golden.

The Inside-Outside Kids combined for 50 of Newton's 84 points, boosting N.C.C. past a surging Waltham Pro Tools, 84-80, in Waltham Boys' and Girls' Club action.

Newton advances to the quarterfinals of the A Division playoffs to be played Tuesday, April 1. Newton will play the winner of Tuesday's Buddies-Parkway contest.

The 6-7 Chenault scored 30 points from in close while Golden was just that from the perimeter, hitting for 20 outside points. In the fourth quarter, the pair combined for 18 of Newton's 20 points to sink a Waltham comeback.

Newton led by nine, 64-55, entering the final frame before Waltham surged to cut the spread to two, 72-70, with three minutes to go. Pro Tool guards Jamie Bourque (21 points) and Steve Slusser (30 points) led the Waltham attack in the fourth, scoring 10 points each.

Waltham burned the much bigger Newton squad from the outside, and no matter how far Kevin Burns' N.C.C. squad pushed with the zone, Bourque and Slusser continued to hit.

"We had the height on them but they couldn't miss from outside," Burns said of the Pro Tool backcourt. "They (Waltham) caught up and they played tough."

Newton led the entire way, going up by eight after one, 24-16, and by nine at the half, 43-34. Newton boosted the lead to 15 with 1:40 left in the third, but Waltham heated up to cut the spread to nine.

"We were up by 10 or so for most of the game, but we were getting tired and we were in foul trouble," Burns said. The coach suited up only six players.

For Newton, Jeff Sherman of Newton Catholic fame scored 14 points to lend a supporting role.

The summary:

Division A

NEWTON C.C.(84)-Terry 13-4-30, Price 5-0-10, Long 2-1-5, Sherman 6-2-14, Lockwood 1-3-5, Golden 10-0-20. Tot. 37-10-84.

Lancers' Cedrone earns All-Catholic hoop spot

The coaches of the Catholic Suburban South Conference showed no hesitation about recognizing basketball talent, regardless of age, when they met recently to choose their annual All-Star team.

Many leagues traditionally like to make their Most Valuable Player a senior, with only the most extraordinary of juniors breaking that trend. But this year, the Catholic's South MVP was neither of those.

Sophomore Andrea Higgins may be only a sophomore, but she made the league's coaches believers whenever they had to face Msgr. Ryan.

Newton Catholic coach Susan Calabro was one of those believers in the young point guard's abilities.

"Boy can she move that ball," was all the coach could say.

Calabro's club put one player on the 11-man All-Star team, Michelle Cedrone.

Four clubs placed a pair of players. Higgins was joined by teammate Linda Linnehan, while league champ Mt. Alvernia, Hudson Catholic and Sacred Heart also had two selections apiece.

Joining Newton Catholic with one player were Ursuline and St. Columbkille.

Newton Catholic's pick:

Michelle Cedrone — Like Higgins, Cedrone is only a sophomore, pointing out just how good the young talent is in this league. She played both the point and off-guard for the Lancers this season, splitting the ballhandling duties with senior Cheryl Chagnon. Calabro showed a lot of confidence in the youngster by letting her bring the ball up.

The 10th-grader led the club in scoring with 10 points a game, and chipped in six steals per contest. Her outside shot is the strongest part of her game and should get even better with more experience.

"She doesn't say too much," said Calabro. "She's very quiet."

The coach sees that as both a plus and minus.

"I hope next year she takes more control. I would like to see her become the leader of the team. I think it would help her and the team."

Cedrone, a good student, is a softball player in addition to her skills on the court.

The All-Stars:

MVP-Andrea Higgins, Msgr. Ryan.
Newton Catholic-Michelle Cedrone.
Mt. Alvernia-Paula Sullivan, Kathy Walsh.
Hudson Catholic-Colleen Hopkins, Barbara Moran.
Msgr. Ryan-Higgins, Linda Linnehan.
Sacred Heart-Tricia McKenna, Susan McNamara.
Ursuline-Jennifer O'Brien.
St. Columbkille-Sheila Tobin.

Soccer program scheduled

The Newton Youth Soccer League board has voted to reinstitute a coed program for ninth- and tenth-graders in the fall of 1986. A recent survey of Newton eighth- and ninth-graders showed strong interest in such a program and led the board to make this decision.

Games will be played on Saturdays beginning Sept. 6 and will continue for a total of 11 contests. Practices will be held on Sundays in order to avoid conflicts by this program with high school academic and athletic activities. As a result, students may choose to add weekend play with the NYSL just for fun or for additional soccer experience. Enhanced training will be available to players in this program.

Places will be available on a first-come, first-served basis regardless of skill level, depending on the number of volunteer coaches and players wishing to participate.

All those who responded positively to the recent survey will receive registration forms in the next few weeks. Others wishing to receive registration forms as players or coaches should contact Don Mitchell at 661-7110 (days) and leave their names, addresses, and telephone numbers.

Defense key to North lacrosse

Coach Rick Clark doesn't have to think too long or too hard about where the strength of the Newton North lacrosse team will lie this spring.

"If we were to play with just defense we'd win everything," said the coach off the first week of practice. "I'm real happy with the defense. Those are the guys back from last year. It's certainly the best defense I've had."

That's high praise, considering that a couple of years ago Clark coached a defense led by Kevin Blake, who was an All-American. The coach feels his present group is every bit as skilled as that one was, with more speed.

The leader of the pack is Dave St. Germain, but not far behind are Scott Lanciloti and Doug Proia.

"They have legs galore," said Clark. "They have some size in there too."

When the coach has to go to the bench, he won't feel too badly about bringing on David Redmond or Josh Field. Either could step in and start without much of a dropoff. Ed Lin provides even more depth.

Making this group even more remarkable is its youth. Only Lanciloti and Redmond are seniors. Field is only a sophomore, and the others are juniors.

Should an opposing attacker manage to get behind that formidable group, he'll have the unfortunate task of taking on Matt Keegan. This will be the goalie's third year with the varsity, the second as a starter, and he's already proved that he's one of the best around.

Should Clark want to give him a breather, junior Brian Vona will come on. Again, Clark will show no hesitation, saying Vona "could be starting for the majority of teams."

With the talent and experience on defense, the coach plans to put much of the load on their shoulders, particularly in the early going.

"We have a real strong group of defensive people and we're going to mix up some things this year," he said. "We're going to make the defense carry the brunt of the work."

The youthful look on defense carries through to the rest of the squad, as it appears that perhaps only nine seniors will be carried on the varsity.

The midfield will have three of those seniors starting on the first line — John Flynn, Otto Mariano and Chuck Leone.

Flynn, a captain in football and lacrosse, is very tough and very skilled. He has size and plenty of speed for getting up and down the field. He should be among the top scorers for the Tigers this spring.

Mariano probably won't be far behind, and Leone will complement the other two with his aggressive play.

The second line provides speed, with juniors Kevin Devereaux, Brian Claflin and Mark Adams joining forces.

Claflin and Adams are veterans of the football team. Claflin has good size, and surprising speed to go with it. Adams' speed and shiftiness are no surprise to anyone who watched him run for over 1,000 yards last fall. Devereaux brings good skills and a mind for the game to the line.

The third and fourth lines will be counted on for aggressiveness and defense while learning the finer points of stickhandling. Junior Nick Mariano has been moved from attack to middie, and will most likely grab one of the third-line slots.

Most of the other spots are wide open, but there is proven athletic ability vying for the jobs. Among the candidates are junior Dave Brecher, senior Tim Troiano (a standout swimmer), junior Zafar Khan (a soccer All-Star), sophomore Al Clark (who saw a lot of varsity time on the gridiron), junior Steve Bourland (another All-Star booter), Tim Connors, Dave O'Connor (a hockey defenseman) and freshman Doug Quinn.

"The third and fourth line have to work on their sticks," said the coach. "They'll have to hustle, play good D and improve."

One thing that hurt the Tigers at midfield is the move of Pat Poon's family to Georgia. The junior proved himself an excellent faceoff man last spring, and he would have been a standout as a senior.

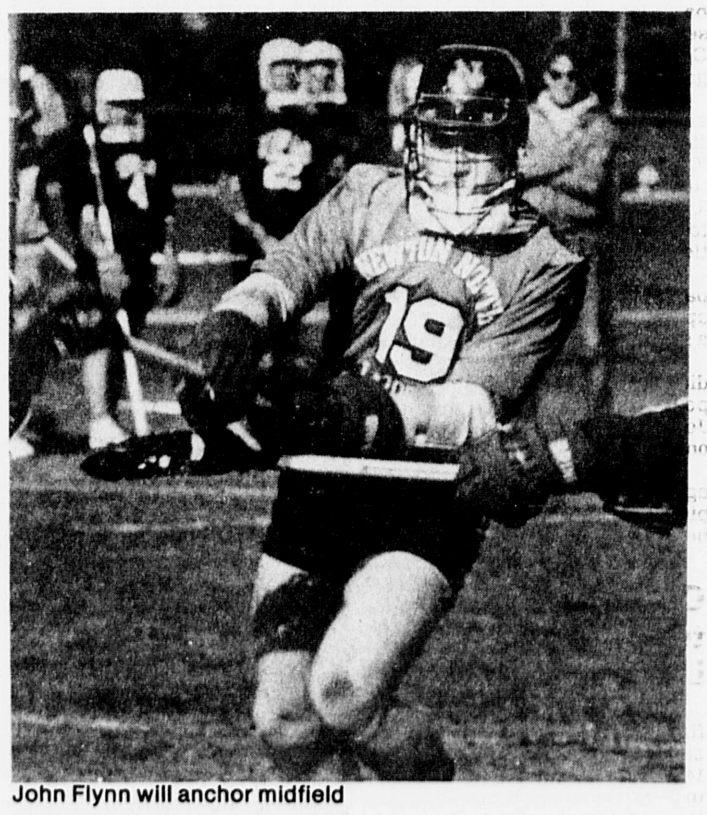

Up front, well, that's a different story. Every coach needs a challenge and Clark knows where his is.

The only returner is senior Josh Carpenter.

"He's just coming into his own," the coach said. "He had a great year in football. He's got a good stick and a good head."

The Tigers are bolstered by Dave Robinson, a transfer from Belmont Hill. Only a junior, Robinson brings experience and ability to an area in which the Tigers could use it most.

After those two, the battle for jobs up front is "a dogfight," according to Clark.

John Flynn will anchor midfield

"We've got some younger kids stepping in," he said. "I think we'll be all right."

Junior Andy Soucie is one of those pressing for a starting job. Right with him on the depth chart are sophomore Rusty Greiff, senior John Morgan, sophomore Steve Plotkin and junior Joe DeRubis.

In an emergency situation, Clark knows he can pull St. Germain off the back line and bring him to attack. He won't do it unless he has to, but he has the comfort of knowing that number one, St. Germain can do the job, and number two, there won't be that much of a dropoff on defense. Redmond is another defender who could make the transition if necessary.

The lack of proven scorers up front puts a burden on the midfield, particularly the first line. Flynn and his linemates will have to do some scoring, especially early in the season while the attacks come along.

"We're looking for a good, balanced attack from both areas," said the coach. "Hopefully the first midfield will pick up a lot."

In addition, the Tigers must take advantage of the loose ball situations and other opportunities, something they've done remarkably well over the years.

"We're not a great settle-down team," admitted Clark. "We take advantage of unsettled situations."

As always, the Tigers will look for the fast break at every opportunity.

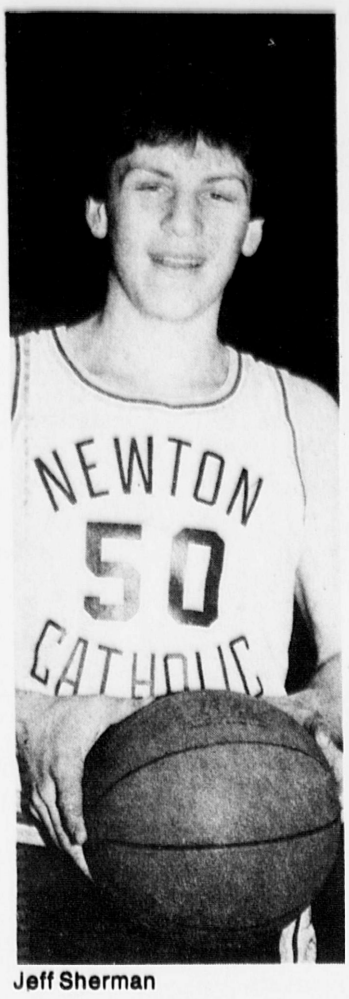

"We're going to be pressing hard, and using a hard ride," the coach said. "We're going to push the ball up the field, especially with that defense. We don't want to hold the ball."

Though Clark sees "a lot more strength overall" in the league, the Tigers should be right there with the best of them.

"It's going to be an interesting year," he said. "If tradition counts for anything, we're ready to be one of the better teams."

To get there, North has to go through some tough competition first. Weymouth North returns almost everyone from last year. Lincoln-Sudbury will be tough, as always. Framingham South will be improved, as will Framingham North under a new coach.

Sherman shares MVP hoop prize

Jeff Sherman

Despite Newton Catholic's 19-4 record, the Catholic Suburban League basketball coaches were unimpressed with the Lancer talent when they got together for their annual All-Star meeting recently. Three different teams had a pair of selections, and another had three, but Newton Catholic managed to place just one player on the squad.

Jeff Sherman, Newton's only pick, was named the circuit's Most Valuable Player, but the coaches didn't even see that as a clear-cut choice and had him sharing the award with North Cambridge Catholic's Gene Kalaw.

League champ NCC, which finished the regular season undefeated, placed three-players on the 10-member team.

St. Patrick's put two players on the squad, P.J. McNeil and John Lawn. Also coming in with two players each were St. Clement's and Mission.

Kalaw, a 6-4 senior center, earned his share of the MVP by being a dominating inside player, particularly on defense. At the other end, he averaged 18 points a game for the champs.

Joining him on the elite squad were teammates Rich Markwarth and Marvin Carter, who is only a junior.

St. Clement's may have a bright future ahead, judging by the All-Star team, as both selections from that team are juniors. Jim Cataldo, who finished second in the league in scoring, is joined by teammate Kevin Wright.

Mission, which finished third to NCC and Newton, put two seniors on the team in Mossie Sheehan and Leon Graves.

The area stars:

Jeff Sherman — This senior forward virtually rewrote the record book at Newton Catholic. The first player ever to crack the 1,000-point mark for his career at the school, Sherman holds no less than 16 Lancer standards. Those include six career, six season and four game records.

Sherman finished this season with a 22.2 scoring average, giving him his second straight league title in that department. It wasn't easy, as he had to outscore runnerup Jim Cataldo of St. Clement's in a head-to-head duel on the final day of the season.

In his career, he totaled 1152 points for a 19.2 average.

The second-year All-Star was called "a program turnarounder" by coach Don Dabenigno. "In his first year, he started as a sophomore and led the team in scoring, and we made the Catholic Tournament. He led the league in scoring as a junior and let it all out as a senior."

Not just a scorer, Sherman could do it all. He blocked shots, led the club in rebounding, and was adept at starting the fast break, often being down at the other end in time to finish it off.

Most importantly, according to his coach, "He never quit. Against Matignon (in the tournament) he was diving out of bounds for loose balls with five minutes to go in a 22-point game."

The solid student is a returning All-Star at first base for the Lancer baseball squad and is considering both sports in college, depending upon which school he winds up at. Among those in consideration are Brandeis, Curry, Suffolk and Framingham State.

P.J. McNeil — A first-year starter, this senior did it all for the Knights. He averaged 19 points a game by shooting 53 percent from the field and 78 percent from the free throw line. He also hauled in eight rebounds a game.

"He had a terrific senior year," said St. Pat's coach Dave Powell. "He made himself into a player."

What makes McNeil's season even more remarkable is that his off-season work was limited due to a badly broken leg which wiped out most of his summer.

"He's an excellent kid with a great attitude," Powell added. "He's respected by the younger kids in the program. ... He's the kind of kid you love to have, and he'll be tough to replace."

McNeil is a standout on the mound for the Knight baseball team. His college possibilities include Stonehill, Curry and Saint Anselm.

John Lawn — Only a junior, Lawn supplied almost half of the Knight offense this year, with McNeil taking care of most of the rest. He averaged 18.8 points a game, mostly on the strength of a deadly outside shot.

Lawn is no one-dimensional player, however. When called upon he brought the ball up against the press, and averaged six rebounds a game despite spending most of his time outside.

"He's a terrific all-around prospect," said Powell. "If he continues to improve and stays injury-free, he'll end up being the best player I've had at St. Pat's."

His love for the game makes Lawn "a coach's dream," according to Powell. "He plays four hours a day."

What makes Lawn even more remarkable is that he's not strictly a basketball player. He had a great season for the outstanding Knight football team last fall, and plans to go out for baseball in the spring. At 6-0, 170 pounds, Lawn's build gives him the flexibility to play just about any sport.

"He's a great leader," summed up Powell. "The kids all respect him. He's the key to next season."

Midgets continue fundraising

The State Champion Newton Midget A's will hold a Las Vegas night on Saturday at the Nonantum Post 440 in Newton to raise funds for the team's visit to Marquette, Mich. for the national title.

The Midgets, slated to leave April 9 for the five-day championship, have raised $3,000 towards the cost of the journey, but need to come up with a total of $25,000 to support the trip.

The Las Vegas night is just one of the several fund raisers the Midgets have planned. The doors will open at 7 p.m. on Saturday and the cost of admission is $3 per person.

The Midgets are also planning a car wash in the near future.

For now, the boys, parents, and coaches, have taken to the streets and are asking local Newton and Waltham merchants for support.

Assistant Coach Jim Rizza said "companies are just starting to respond. The parents and kids are out working and we're sending letters out to help raise the money."

Troubadour shocked by Security

NEWTON — Patty Curtin was nearly unstoppable as United Security pulled off a major upset in the Newton Twilight Women's Volleyball League playoffs on Monday night at Day Jr. High.

Curtin scored 19 points while serving, but her setting and spiking was even more important to United' 15-9, 16-14, 15-2 victory over Troubadour.

Troubadour had lost only once all season in easily rolling to the league's best record. United Security managed to grab the fourth and final playoff spot to position itself for the upset.

LeeAnn Downey was the standout for Troubadour with eight points.

The other semifinal round featured an upset as well, though not quite of the same proportion. Third-place Kevin Max battled back from behind to take a five-set victory over second-place O'Hara's in a 2½-hour marathon game.

O'Hara's was sitting pretty after two games, winning those 15-13, 18-16, but could never put Kevin Max away. The third-place finishers swept the next three, 15-6, 15-10 and 15-10 to earn the right to face United Security for the title.

Sue Breen and Donna Laska paced Kevin Max with 13 points apiece. Elaine Razzetti provided a spark with her strong defense.

For O'Hara's, Laura DeFazio did most of the scoring with 14 points. Sister Michelle and Joanne Golding both played well on defense.

Monday, United will square off against Kevin Max for the championship in a best-of-five outing, beginning at 7 p.m. at Day.

WITHOUT ADVERTISING EVEN THE BEST IDEAS TAKE AGES TO CATCH ON.

Every now and then, a new product becomes popular by word of mouth alone. But that process usually takes many months. Sometimes years. By then, the company that makes the new product may be in serious trouble—if they're around at all.

Advertising is the surest way to get an idea to the public. By advertising a new product or service, more people are able to try it more quickly than if it were allowed to "catch on" by itself.

Good ideas become popular right away and bad ideas...well, who needs a square wheel, anyway?

UNESCO helping Rocky Mtn. Nat. Park

EDITOR'S NOTE — Conservationists are trying to preserve the 83,000 acres of Alpine tundra found in the highest reaches of Rocky Mountain National Park. The park is one of UNESCO's "biosphere preserves," areas the United Nations agency is safeguarding for conservation of nature and scientific research.

By S.J. Guffey

ROCKY MOUNTAIN NATIONAL PARK, Colo. (AP) — For those who live along the Front Range of the Colorado Rockies, Rocky Mountain National Park is "almost a suburban park," says Glen Kaye, chief naturalist for the U.S. Park Service.

It's a couple of hours from Denver, through some of the state's best scenery.

A plaque inside the headquarters describes the 75-year-old park's international and scientific importance. This is one of UNESCO's "biosphere preserves." For the last 15 years, the United Nations agency has worked to identify a network of types of ecosystems "devoted to conservation of nature and scientific research."

The point is to provide "a standard against which the effects of man's impact on his environment can be measured."

Here, conservationists hope to keep intact the 83,000 acres of Alpine tundra found in the highest reaches of Rocky's 265,000 acres.

Streams of cars, trucks and campers flow through the gates of Rocky Mountain National Park on a typical day. The license plates say Arizona, Michigan, Nebraska, Wisconsin.

The number of park visitors peaked at 3.1 million in 1978. The 1984 total was 3 million.

The number of people who visit in summer hasn't changed much in the last 10 years, but more and more come in the spring and fall, according to Kaye.

It costs $2 per vehicle. Park Service workers figure it takes about 15 seconds to say hello, collect the money and wave a vehicle through the gates.

Even at just 15 seconds, it doesn't take long for lines to form during summer. It's not uncommon to see a tired tourist give up the wait, U-turn on the highway and drive away.

Kaye and the others who work at "Rocky," as the park is called, don't mind being crossed off an itinerary.

At a place where so much energy goes into getting things back the way they used to be, Kaye says, "Success isn't more people."

Rocky's plants are found in three zones. Below 9,000 feet, montane forests feature ponderosa pines. From 9,000 to 11,000 feet, there are sub-Alpine forests with fir and Engleman spruce. Above 11,000 feet, there's the Alpine tundra.

In winter, winds whip up to 200 mph. Temperatures plunge to minus 40. The wind chill factor can be minus 100.

The park isn't too far north, but parts of it are very high. The summit of Longs Peak is 14,255 feet above sea level. It is the altitude that provides the severe surroundings always found with tundra.

Tundra is a world in miniature, with a growing season just six to eight weeks a year. Flowers bloom in intricate, brilliantly colored variety, but a visitor must stoop to see what's there.

Alpine clover, Alpine avens, Arctic gentian — "There are plants growing here you would have in northern Canada or Siberia," Kaye says.

Much of what the world understands about tundra plant life came out of research a Ph.D. candidate did in this park 20 years ago.

"We have a policy that we are trying to restore (the park) to conditions prior to the arrival of the first European explorers in the 1830s," Kaye says.

Before changes are made to do that, the Park Service considers whether it's financially or physically possible.

There's a meadow of timothy planted in the 1870s that isn't going to be removed "because it's become naturalized," Kaye explains.

River otters — hunted out of the state when their pelts were fashionable during the last century — were reintroduced along the Colorado River eight years ago. The otters thrived and, a few years ago, some were spotted on this side of the Continental Divide.

Once miners bragged of landing 500 fish a day. They were the native greenback cutthroat trout, a species once feared extinct because of competition from imported German brown and Eastern brook trout.

A few years ago someone noticed some cutthroats in an isolated pool outside the park. A few remote lakes now have been treated to remove the brown and brook trout, then cutthroats were stocked.

Today, with barbless hooks, it is possible to catch a native cutthroat trout in Rocky Mountain National Park. The fish must be returned to the water. The fine for keeping one can be $5,000.

Moose were never plentiful in Colorado, but they were gone, too, until a few years ago, when 40 were released in the northwest corner of the park. They have done so well that Colorado wildlife officials last fall issued six moose-hunting permits.

The suspect, a Brookline resident, was spotted by the waitress at a bus stop on Hammond Park Parkway. Police approached the man to pay the check but he did not have any money with him. He then told the police he would reimburse the restaurant before Tuesday.

Officers form school drug squad

NEWTON — The Massachusetts Juvenile Police Officers Association held its monthly meeting at Paris 26 with District Attorney Scott Harshbarger as principle speaker.

The meeting was co-hosted by Juvenile Officer Paul Golden and Chief William F. Quinn of the Newton Police Department.

Quinn in his welcoming remarks announced the formation of a new three-person drug squad to work with School Administrators in reducing drugs in school. He also commended the on-going interest of the Newton Schools and questioned the value of the recent coverage by a TV station.

District Attorney Harshbarger stated that previously, "There was a high neglect of juvenile problems unless they were in the areas of murder, rape or child abuse."

He noted that structure for juveniles with problems was important and his administration will endeavor to provide such structure with speedy hearings for involved youths to avoid contributing to the group of hard core repeat offenders.

The District Attorney added his office will work more closely with judges, probation officers, juvenile officers, with a view toward isolating potential hard core offenders by early recognition of problems.

Both the chief and the district attorney agreed that, although statistics have shown that a large number of students have tried drugs, only a small number of students become heavily involved. They also agreed that a majority of 80-90 percent of Newton High School students continue on to higher education and will, in fact, become normal, productive members of our community.

Other guests included Honorable Monte G. Basbas, Chief Probation Officer Marie Stevens, Probation Officer John Sullivan and Safety Officer Cynthia Webster and Lt. James O'Donnell.

President Charles Haney of the Stoneham Police Department, conducted the meeting and announced the next meeting will be in West Springfield.

Youth program awards

City seeks nominations

NEWTON — The Newton Youth Commission and the Newton Parks and Recreation Commission would like to remind the community that they are continuing to invite nominations for the Eighth Annual Newton Youth Awards Program. Four citizens of Newton who have contributed to Youth programs in the city will be honored. The awards are for a person's overall involvement in youth programs, not solely for their involvement this year.

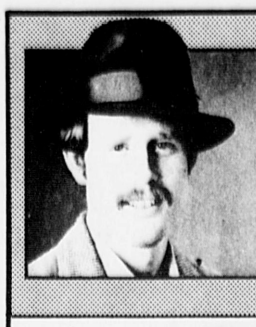

The four categories for this year's awards are: Adult Award - to be awarded to an adult citizen of Newton over the age of twenty-five (25) for the person's overall involvement in youth programs and activities. Young Adult Award - to be awarded to a young adult citizen of Newton between the ages of eighteen (18) and twenty-five (25) for the above reasons. Senior Youth Award - to be awarded to a youth in grades 9 through 12, whose high school class has not yet graduated, and who has made a contribution to youth programs and activities in Newton. Junior Youth Award - to be awarded to a youth in elementary through eighth grade for the above reasons.

Marion Blank, Chairperson of the Youth Commission welcomes all residents who are active in youth affairs to submit applications for themselves or to nominate other deserving candidates.

Applications for all award categories will be available until April 4, 1986 at the Newton Department of Human Services, City Hall; Newton School; Public Libraries; Parks and Recreation Department; and Youth Centers. The deadline for filing applications is April 4, 1986.

For more information on this program and for applications, please contact Jana Sax, Social Services Coordinator, Newton Department of Human Services, telephone 552-7170.
